Introducing WriteShop

Welcome to WriteShop II! Now that you feel comfortable writing descriptive, informative, and narrative compositions, you're ready to put your new skills to work. Many compositions in WriteShop II will ask you to combine these three writing styles to produce interesting, lively narratives.

Why are so many of us intimidated by writing? Because we were never given the right tools and techniques to do it well. Like learning to play a musical instrument, developing writing skills takes time and practice. With guidance, encouragement, and proper tools, you too can become an excellent and confident writer. That's what WriteShop is all about!

But WriteShop is also for you who enjoy writing. Maybe you like to express yourself creatively, choosing interesting words and colorful phrases to spice up your compositions. You may prefer descriptive writing, which appeals to the five senses. Or perhaps you feel more comfortable with narrative writing, composing stories about yourself or others. Some students love to prove an argument or engage in a debate, which helps develop logical and critical thinking skills. Such students often enjoy giving their opinions in writing. Others prefer researching and writing a report.

Whichever student you are, WriteShop's incremental approach takes the guesswork out of how to write. If you enjoy writing, you will learn more sophisticated ways of expressing yourself by practicing with various types of compositions (descriptive, narrative, informative, and persuasive).

If writing overwhelms or discourages you, you will find that this program's step-by-step approach gives you the necessary tools to develop not just acceptable but excellent writing skills. Just as you learned how to do math equations or play a musical instrument, so too you can learn to write. As you learn, practice, and build on each concept or step, you will be able to express yourself more and more easily. Soon, you may even find yourself enjoying the writing process!

Note about the Teacher's Manual: Your parent or teacher will need to use the accompanying Teacher's Manual. This student book is not intended for you to work through completely on your own. First, it does not contain any answer keys to lesson activities or Skill Builders. Second, it does not provide complete instructions for the teacher. Finally, it does not have the tools your teacher needs to edit and evaluate your work.

The Writing Process: Easy As 1-2-3-4-5

1. Brainstorm.

- ☐ Never skip this important step. It gets your ideas flowing so you can write!
- ☐ There are many ways to brainstorm, such as lists, mind-maps, charts, Venn diagrams, word banks, writing clusters, outlines, etc. All of your WriteShop assignments include brainstorming suggestions.

2. Write a "sloppy copy."

- ☐ It does not have to be neat—just make sure it's readable!
- ☐ Skip lines as you write or double-space if typing.
- ☐ Check your "sloppy copy" against the "Content" and "Style" sections of your Writing Skills Checklist, making necessary corrections.

3. Write your first revision.

- ☐ This copy should be neatly written or typed.
- ☐ Continue to skip lines or double-space.
- ☐ When finished, check your newly revised copy against the "Mechanics" section of your Writing Skills Checklist, making necessary corrections.
- ☐ Recheck your paper for content and style and make corrections.
- ☐ Staple or paperclip everything together in proper order.
 - Brainstorming sheet or worksheet on the bottom
 - "Sloppy copy" on top of that
 - First revision on top of "sloppy copy"
 - Student Writing Skills Checklist on top of first revision

4. Give your composition to your parent/teacher for editing and comments.

- ☐ Your teacher will staple the Teacher Writing Skills Checklist on top.

5. Write your final draft.

- ☐ Make corrections using teacher suggestions from the Teacher Writing Skills Checklist or your paper.
- ☐ Type or neatly rewrite your final draft. Pay close attention to details.
- ☐ Double-check your paper against your Writing Skills Checklist to make sure style and mechanics are still okay, especially if you added sentences or made other major changes.
- ☐ Keep all papers together in their original order, attaching your final draft to the top
- ☐ Hand in your finished composition.

- 1. All work written on notebook paper must use the headings shown in the following sample. Remember: a/ways indent the first line of every paragraph.
- 2. Get into the habit of writing on every other line. This leaves space for editing your work. (It is not necessary to skip lines for Skill Builders or other daily work.)
- 3. Do not write on the back of the page. Instead, continue on a second sheet of paper. Staple multiple copies together in the upper left corner.

●	First and Last Name Date Draft (sloppy copy, etc.) Title

1. All typed work must use the headings as in the following sample. Indent the first line of every paragraph about a half-inch (about 5 letters).
2. Double-space the body of the paragraph. This leaves room for editing your work. Type your name and date, single-spaced, in the upper right-hand corner. Then triple-space before typing the title, which should be centered. Double-space after the title to begin the body.
3. Use a standard font like Times New Roman, Arial, or Calibri, preferably in 12-pt. font. Do not use bold print or excessively large or fancy fonts.
4. Do not print on the back of the page. Instead, continue on a second sheet of paper. Staple multiple copies together in the upper left corner.

(Leave a 1- to 1½-inch margin all around your paper.)

First and Last Name
 Date
 Draft (1st Revision, etc.)

(Triple-space after heading)

Title
(Double-space after title)

Indent ½" (about 5 letters) for each new paragraph.

Double-space the body of the composition. Double-spacing leaves plenty of room for editing.

If the composition requires a second or third paragraph, do not increase the spacing between paragraphs.

The spacing between each paragraph should be the same as the spacing of the body.

Ingredients for a Tasty Paragraph

Think of your paragraph as a cookie jar. The most important part of the jar is what's inside . . . it doesn't matter how decorative the jar is; it's what's inside that counts.

A paragraph contains several sentences that discuss and develop one thought. It is held together by one main idea. Without that common thread, you have just a group of separate sentences, not a paragraph.

Suppose someone gives you a gift. If you open it and find a jar marked "COOKIES," what do you expect to find in the jar? Cookies, right? Imagine finding a carrot in there, too! Wouldn't that be strange? All the sentences in a paragraph need to be about the same subject, or the paragraph will be just as surprising. Consider reading a paragraph about surfing and finding in it a sentence about shopping along the pier. That would be like the jar of cookies with a carrot in it!¹

Next, think about taking the jar out of the box and finding no lid on it. Would that work? A jar without a lid would let the cookies spill out. It certainly would not be a complete cookie jar. A paragraph must also have a kind of lid, or it feels incomplete. The "lid" of a paragraph is a good, interesting beginning sentence that gets a paragraph off to a good start.

Finally, imagine that your jar of cookies arrived with the bottom broken out. What would you expect to happen? A jar without a bottom would not be a complete jar. Its contents would fall out. An ending sentence that makes the paragraph feel closed is the "bottom" of a paragraph. Without it, the paragraph does not feel finished.

So, remember the three "ingredients" for a strong paragraph:

1. One main idea.
2. An interesting topic sentence to introduce the reader to your subject.
3. An ending, or closing, sentence to sum up your paragraph.

¹Credit for the "carrot in a cookie jar" idea goes to Susan Bradrick, Understanding Writing (Port Orchard, Wash.: Bradrick Family Enterprises, 1991).

Choosing a Topic and Closing Sentence

TOPIC SENTENCES

A topic sentence introduces the reader to your paragraph. It should be general enough to cover all that you will write about and interesting enough to catch your reader's attention.

Let's say you decide to write about apples. You observe an apple carefully and discover whether it is sweet or tart, juicy or mushy, red or green, smooth or waxy. Here are some possible TOPIC SENTENCES. Read each sentence and discover why each would be a good or poor choice to introduce your paragraph.

- ☐ I love to snack on fruit.

This is not a good topic sentence because it is too general. Your paragraph is not about fruit; it is about apples.

- ☐ Apples are sweet and juicy.
- ☐ Apples are crisp and tart.
- ☐ Apples are red and round.

These are not good topic sentences either; they are too specific. You are not writing your entire paragraph about how sweet and juicy your apple is—only a sentence or two. The same goes for the other two examples. The paragraph is about your apple, inside and out. Don't be too specific with your topic sentence.

- ☐ Apples make terrific snacks.
- ☐ I enjoy nothing better than a tasty apple.
- ☐ My mouth waters at the thought of a delicious apple.

These are good topic sentences! They tell the reader what the paragraph will be about—apples. They let you save the details about color, flavor, and texture for the body of the paragraph.

NOTE: These examples of topic sentences are simplistic. As you progress in your writing skills, your topic sentences will become more complex.

CLOSING SENTENCES

Follow the same rule when choosing a closing sentence. You want your closing sentence to sum up what you have said in the body of the paragraph:

I can't wait to devour my Jonathan apple. Its bright red color and smooth skin appeal to my sense of sight. I know that when I bite into it my taste buds will welcome that fresh burst of flavor. This apple could prove to be the crunchiest, crispest, most mouth-watering piece of fruit I've ever enjoyed. Nothing is more satisfying than a fresh autumn apple.

Glossary of Writing Terms

"Carrot in a cookie jar": A phrase or sentence that is either unrelated to the topic of the paragraph OR detracts from the paragraph's unity of thought.

Concise, conciseness: Using the fewest words possible to convey clear meaning. It is helpful to avoid slang, as well as vague, weak, and repeated words. Choose a few concrete words, rather than many unclear words, to communicate concisely.

Concrete, concreteness: Using colorful, descriptive, precise nouns, adjectives, verbs, and adverbs to appeal to the reader's five senses.

Content: The purpose of a composition is to convey meaningful ideas to others. This is first accomplished through its content, which includes the subject matter, the title, and the purpose of the written piece (typically to describe, inform, narrate, or persuade, but also to encourage, amuse, instruct, or comfort).

Descriptive writing: Describing objects, scenery, experiences, etc., through vivid, well-chosen, sensory words to paint a word picture in the reader's mind.

Graciousness: The content and word choice should be appropriate for the intended audience. Gracious writing treats the reader with respect.

Informative writing: Informative writing, also called expository writing, is designed to explain. Factual details are presented in a sensible and organized manner. As with descriptive writing, specific, vivid words must be used to develop the subject matter clearly and logically.

Mechanics: Writing mechanics include the skills of spelling, punctuation, and grammar.

Narrative writing: Often thought of as a story, narrative writing combines elements of description and explanation to recount an experience, event, or occurrence.

Paragraph: A division of a piece of writing typically formed by a group of three or more sentences. A true paragraph forms a unit of thought. Its first word is always indented. Generally, a paragraph has an introduction (topic sentence), some form of development (body), and a conclusion (closing sentence).

Parallelism: A pattern of repeated, similarly constructed phrases or sentences that use the same part of speech.

Example A: Susan is loyal, kind, and truthful (each of these is an adjective).

Example B: Exercising regularly helps teens gain strength, develop coordination, and feel more energetic (each is a verb).

Persuasive writing: Persuasive writing, also known as argumentation, presents facts and supporting details in a logical order to prove or disprove a point, to influence the reader's thinking or behavior, or to change someone's mind about an issue.

Sentence: A group of words that expresses a complete thought in the form of a statement, command, exclamation, or question. It contains at least a verb and a noun, begins with a capital letter, and ends with a punctuation mark.

Style: Style generally refers to writing technique. In order to express themselves meaningfully, writers select specific words and organize them in a specific way.

Wordy, wordiness (also known as verbose or flowery): The use of more words than are needed to express an idea; emphasizing style at the expense of thought.

Glossary of Sentence Variations

Using a variety of sentence types in one's writing creates a more interesting composition. The following parts of speech make effective sentence starters.

NOTE: For further discussion, explanation, or examples, rely on a good English handbook. Also, Easy Writing by Wanda Phillips (ISHA Enterprises) gives extensive practice with many of these sentence variations.

Adverb/adverbial phrase: Modifies a verb. Tells how, when, where, and to what extent (how much or how long). Many times an adverb will end in -ly.

Gratefully, Scott accepted the gift from his aunt.

Yesterday a sudden storm interrupted our barbecue.

Appositive: A specific kind of explanatory word or phrase that identifies or renames a noun or a pronoun. It is placed by the word it explains and is set off by commas. The exception is something that is essential to the meaning of the sentence. In the last example below, Jackie is essential if there is more than one older sister. This is why the appositive is not set off by commas.

- Marty, who lives next door, drives an old truck.
- The women in navy suits, flight attendants for Worldwide Airlines, boarded the plane.
- My older sister Jackie lives in Florida.

Infinitive: The simplest form of a verb, written as "to + verb" (to run, to shout, to eat). It takes practice to use an infinitive sentence starter yet avoid using a "to be" word.

- To play the piano with skill is difficult. (not recommended; uses a "to be" word)
- To play the piano with skill requires hours of diligent practice. (better; uses a concrete verb)

Metaphor: A word picture comparing things that are basically unlike but have striking similarities. A form of "to be" sometimes expresses the comparison.

Puffy white clouds were marshmallows in the morning sky.

Lucinda was a bitter woman whose heart was made of stone.

Soldiers at attention, the row of trees guarded the old mansion. (Note: Comparison between trees and soldiers is made without the use of a "to be" word.)

Paired adjectives: A pair of related adjectives used to begin a sentence. As with participles, the subject must agree with the adjectives.

Incorrect: Serene and peaceful, the cradle held the sleeping infant. (The crib is not serene and peaceful.)

Correct: Serene and peaceful, the sleeping infant lay in her cradle. (The sleeping infant is serene and peaceful.)

Paired adjectives may be opposites, often useful in showing conflict of emotions or to demonstrate "in spite of" or "nonetheless." Notice the use of but or yet.

Scared but willing, Mark crept to the edge of the high dive.

Elderly yet fun-loving, Grandpa joined us for a round of miniature golf.

Participle/participial phrase: A participle is a verb form. Adding "ing" to a verb forms a present participle. To form a past participle, add "ed" or "en."

Looking at the moon, the dog began to howl. (present participle)

Stunned by the fall, the cowboy rested before remounting his horse. (past participle)

The subject of the sentence must closely follow the participle. The participle and the subject must agree with one another, thus avoiding a misplaced modifier.

Incorrect: Trembling with fear, the stream was difficult for Casey to cross. (The stream did not tremble with fear.)

Correct: Trembling with fear, Casey crossed the stream with difficulty. (Casey trembled with fear.)

Prepositional phrase: Prepositions are relational words that usually tell where (near, beside) or when (before, since). A prepositional phrase begins with a preposition and ends with its object (near the boat, beside a quiet stream, waters, before school, since early this morning). Here are sentences that begin with a prepositional phrase:

Between lunch and dinner, the children played contentedly on the beach.

Under the bridge, a homeless drifter huddled in his thin blanket.

Note: Beware of mistaking a subordinate conjunction for a preposition. A subordinate conjunction becomes a preposition only if it has an object:

Incorrect: After the boys escaped from the burning building, they dashed to safety. (The boys escaped is an independent clause. In this case, boys is a subject, not an object. Therefore, after is a subordinate conjunction, not a preposition.)

Correct: After escaping from the burning building, the boys dashed to safety. (Escaping is a special verbal called a gerund, which functions as a noun. In this sentence, it serves as the object of the preposition.)

Correct: After dark, the boys escaped to safety. (The word dark is the object of the preposition.)

Simile: The difference between a metaphor and a simile is the use of the word "like" or "as" to make the comparison.

Puffy white clouds floated like marshmallows in the morning sky.

Laurie thought Daddy's beard felt as rough as sandpaper.

Like soldiers at attention, the row of trees guarded the old mansion.

Subject-verb: The subject appears at or near the beginning of the sentence; the verb follows. This is the most common (and most overused) sentence type.

Susie wandered along the path.

Five birds sat on Mr. Spreckel's picket fence.

Subordinate conjunction: This expresses relationship between the main clause and the subordinate clause. It may begin a sentence or appear within a sentence. We encourage students to begin at least one sentence with a subordinate conjunction for yet another alternative to the subject-verb opener. Here is a partial list:

after	although	as	because	before	even though	if since	though	unless	until	when	whether	while

Incorrect: Before sunrise, John's neighbors arrived to help build the new barn.
("Sunrise" is the object, making "before" a preposition.)

Correct: Before the sun came up, John's neighbors arrived to help build the new barn. (Don't make the mistake of assuming that "before the sun" is a prepositional phrase. "The sun came up" is a clause, making "before" a subordinate conjunction.)

Transition words (also called coordinate conjunctions): These words often connect thoughts between sentences and paragraphs. Some are useful as conclusions. They are usually followed by a comma. Here are some possible transition words:

accordingly	also	additionally	besides	consequently	furthermore however	instead	likewise	meanwhile	nevertheless	therefore

Furthermore, a well-trained dog will not chew or dig.

Therefore, young children should be taught to speak a second language.

Common Problems of Mechanics

The following pages illustrate some of the most common errors of grammar and punctuation. In order to watch for these in your writing, you must be sure to have a clear understanding of these common problems of mechanics. This is not intended to give complete instruction but to simply offer examples. Please refer to your English handbook for further clarification. If you see repeated problems, address them with a grammar curriculum.

CONFUSION BETWEEN PLURAL AND POSSESSIVE

Many students have trouble with this. PLEASE REVIEW THIS CONCEPT! Common examples include:

□ it's* instead of *its

1. An apostrophe shows ownership when used with a noun. For example: This necklace is Mom's, the gentleman's book, or that dog's rawhide bone
2. Possessive pronouns DO NOT use apostrophes, as in This necklace is hers, his book, and "its bone.
3. It's is a contraction for it is.
4. Tip: If you are tempted to write it's substitute it is to see if the sentence makes sense. If not, use its.

□ Making plural nouns possessive. Remember—more than one of a noun is plural. But if a noun shows ownership, it is possessive. Here are some examples:

Incorrect: My shell's have a hollow cavity containing grain's of sand.
(This example shows plurals incorrectly written as possessives.)

Correct: My shells have a hollow cavity containing grains of sand.
(Add /s/ to the end of most nouns to make a plural—no apostrophe!)

Also correct: My shells' hollow cavities contain grains of sand.
(This example shows ownership—more than one shell.)

My shell's hollow cavity contains grains of sand.
(This example shows ownership—only one shell.)

HOMONYM CONFUSION

□ Beware of homonym confusion. Students often misuse words like are and our.

1. Are (pronounced "ahr") is a "be" word (is, am, are, was, etc.). Our is a possessive pronoun meaning belonging to us. If you start to spell the word A-R-E, you should ask yourself if you meant to use a "to be" word. If not, then you should use the O-U-R spelling.

2. There/their/they're and your/you're are also commonly confused homonyms.

Incorrect: I hope your having a wonderful vacation. ("your" = possessive/ownership)

Correct: I hope you're having a wonderful vacation. ("you're" = you + are)

INCOMPLETE SENTENCES (FRAGMENTS)

❑ A sentence must have a subject and a verb.

Incorrect: My birthday, the most exciting day of the year. (no verb)

Correct: My birthday, the most exciting day of the year, falls on July 4th.
(verb) ^

Incorrect: And next visited the amazing Mt. Rushmore. (missing subject; begins with "and")

Correct: Next we visited the amazing Mt. Rushmore.
(subject) ^

RUN-ON SENTENCES

❑ Comma splice (two sentences separated by a comma)

Incorrect: I fan the pages, the musty smell of the book blows on my face.

Correct 1: I fan the pages. The musty smell of the book blows on my face.

Correct 2: I fan the pages; the musty smell of the book blows on my face.

Correct 3: I fan the pages, and the musty smell of the book blows on my face.

Correct 4: As I fan the pages, the musty smell of the book blows on my face.

Incorrect: The rosebush is in full bloom, it bears showy pink blossoms.

Correct 1: The rosebush is in full bloom. It bears showy pink blossoms.

Correct 2: The rosebush, in full bloom, bears showy pink blossoms.

Correct 3: When in full bloom, the rosebush bears showy pink blossoms.

Correct 4: When the rosebush is in full bloom, it bears showy pink blossoms.

□ Two complete sentences that run together

Incorrect: This rock is angular and sharp it has a smooth, glassy surface.

Correct 1: This rock is angular and sharp. It has a smooth, glassy surface.

Correct 2: This rock is angular and sharp; it has a smooth, glassy surface.

Even better:

Correct 3: This rock is angular and sharp with a smooth, glassy surface.

Correct 4: This sharp, angular rock feels smooth and glassy.

Correct 5: Angular and sharp, this rock has a smooth, glassy surface.

Correct 6: Although angular and sharp, this rock has a smooth, glassy surface.

□ Rambling sentences (leave the reader feeling "breathless")

Incorrect: This enormous tree is growing dark green, loose, thin, soft leaves which hang down from the branches that chatter in the wind reminding me of camping in Dogwood.
(Sentence is too long; too many adjectives.)

Correct 1: This enormous tree grows soft, thin leaves that hang loosely from the branches. Chattering in the wind, they remind me of camping in Dogwood.

Correct 2: The tree's thin, dark green leaves loosely hang from the branches. When they chatter in the wind, I think of camping in Dogwood.

Incorrect: Interesting and odd, like a dog, the Arctic wolf looks solemn and kind yet at times when it hunts it may look mean and ferocious which makes it seem not pleasant at all.
(Sentence is wordy and rambling; too much information; incorrect word choices.)

Correct 1: Although the Arctic wolf can seem as gentle as a pet dog, it becomes mean and ferocious when it hunts.

Correct 2: Deceptively friendly in appearance, the Arctic wolf becomes mean and ferocious when it hunts.

INCORRECT USE OF COMMAS

❑ Breaking up a sentence with a comma

Incorrect: Square dancing at Riley's Farm, always makes my feet tired.

Correct: Square dancing at Riley's Farm always makes my feet tired.

❑ Comma suggestions

3. Commas tend to be overused. When in doubt, leave it out.
4. DO use a comma at the end of a phrase, like:
 Suddenly lurching, the train jumped the tracks.
 Gazing up at the stars, I marvel at the universe.
5. DO use a comma to set off an appositive:
 Senator Smith, the man in the blue coat, spoke at the rally.
 That shaggy dog, a pure-bred collie, needs grooming.
6. DO NOT use a comma to separate two complete sentences.
7. DO NOT use a comma where there is no natural pause. It helps if you read the sentence aloud and pause dramatically at the comma. Does the comma fit? Does the sentence flow well? Does it sound better without the comma?
8. DO double-check usage in a grammar handbook when you are unsure.

MISPLACED MODIFIERS

❑ Subject agreement

When writing a participial phrase, paired adjective phrase, or adverbial phrase, the subject of that phrase must appear next to or near the participial phrase.
 (Note: these types of phrases are usually set off by commas.)

1. Participial Phrase

Incorrect: Chasing their tails, the crowd of children laughed at the silly dogs.

Correct: Chasing their tails, the silly dogs amused the crowd of children.

When writing a participial phrase, ask yourself questions such as “Did the crowd of children chase their tails, or did the silly dogs chase their tails?” This will help you decide if your sentence makes sense.

Notice that in the correct sentence, the subject of the sentence (the dogs) appears right after the participial phrase (chasing their tails).

2. Adverbial Phrase

Incorrect: Noisily squealing, Dad took the car to the brake shop for repairs.

Correct: Noisily squealing, the car needed to have its brakes repaired.

Again, ask yourself the same questions. “Did Dad squeal noisily, or did the car squeal noisily?” In the correct sentence, the car, which is obviously the right answer, appears immediately after the participial phrase that modifies it.

3. Paired Adjective Phrase

Incorrect: Crisp and brown, I ate my toast with butter and jam.

Correct: Crisp and brown, my toast tasted delicious with butter and jam.

Who or what is crisp and brown? This is the subject that should closely follow the comma. In this case, toast is the correct subject.

Unit 4:

Reviewing the Basics

Lesson 17: Describing an Object

This assignment requires some detective skills, calling on you to use your keen powers of observation (your five senses). If this is your first descriptive writing assignment as a WriteShop student, here are the main rules.

- Do describe how the object looks, sounds, smells, and feels.
- Do use concrete, specific words to describe your object.
- Do not tell how the object is used.
- Do not tell a story.

Here is an example of how to describe an object.

The Wedding Gown

My sister's wedding dress hangs from a hook in her room. Sheer and filmy, snow-white organza covers the satin lining in a soft mist. Floral appliques, as fresh as daisies, adorn the V-necked bodice and cap sleeves. The detailing is delicate and lovely. Draping to the ground, a flowing train makes the gown seem ten feet tall. Three satin roses on the back hide the hooks Karah will use to bustle her train. She will make a radiant bride in her graceful gown.

Guidelines and Tips

1. Pick an object to describe. Look for something with several interesting aspects, such as a car or bike, child's toy, electronic gadget, action figure, sporting equipment, element from nature, jewelry or clothing item, musical instrument, or piece of furniture.
2. Do choose an object you can observe and handle.
3. Do not describe a food, a person, or a live animal.
4. As you study your object, use "Observing an Object Worksheet" (p. 17-3). Instead of writing directly on the worksheet, use lined paper to make your notes.
5. A good topic sentence should never say, "I am going to describe a _____," or "Let me tell you about my _____." Think creatively!
6. Do not try to describe every detail you observed.
7. Avoid the phrases "it looks," "it feels," "it sounds," etc.
8. Telling how the object reminds you of something else is a good descriptive technique. Instead of writing, "Its smell (or its texture) reminds me of _____," try saying, "Its musty odor reminds me of _____," or "When I touch its scratchy surface, I think of _____."

Write the Paragraph

For your first assignment, write one descriptive paragraph that's 6-9 sentences long—no more, no fewer. Use this checklist as a guide.

- ☐ BEFORE YOU BEGIN WRITING: Complete all three Skill Builders to learn or review how to use some interesting sentence variations. (Skill Builders begin on p. 17-5).
- ☐ If you have not used WriteShop I before, use only the following three sentence variations:
 - Paired adjectives (See the Word Lists at the back of this workbook for possible word choices, especially pp. 18-22.)
 - Present participial phrase
 - Simile
- ☐ If you are a continuing WriteShop student, also add these sentence variations.
 - Adverb or adverbial phrase
 - Prepositional phrase
 - Appositive
- ☐ Don't use more than one "to be" word in your paragraph (is, am, are, was, were, be, being, or been).
- ☐ Include one sentence of six or fewer words.
- ☐ Include at least one subject-verb sentence.
- ☐ To help you choose vivid, concrete words, use the Word Lists from the back of your WriteShop II Student Workbook. Start here:
 - Sound Words (pp. 18-19)
 - Taste and Smell Words (p. 20)
 - Texture Words (p. 21)
 - Visual Words (p. 22)
- ☐ Use your thesaurus or Synonym Finder to replace boring or vague words with stronger, more concrete ones.
- ☐ Avoid weak, overused words, such as the ones on p. 17 of your Word Lists.
- ☐ End with a closing sentence that gives a feeling of ending.

Lesson 17: Observing an Object Worksheet

Look closely at your object. Hunt for unusual, intricate, or interesting details. Use these questions as a guide to help you carefully describe your object. Take notes on lined paper and/or make a mind-map.

Appearance: Use the "Visual Words" list (p. 22) and "Color Words" list (p. 8) at the back of this workbook for ideas.

- ☐ What color(s) is it?
- ☐ How is it shaped or formed?
- ☐ What are its features?
- ☐ What is its surface like?
- ☐ What does its appearance remind you of?
- ☐ Other _____
- ☐ Other _____

Texture: Use the "Texture Words" list at the back of this workbook.

- ☐ What does it feel like? Is it smooth or rough, soft or hard, furry or scaly, or . . . ?
- ☐ What does its texture remind you of?
- ☐ Other _____

Smell: Use the "Taste and Smell Words" list at the back of this workbook. Not every object will have a smell. Keep your audience in mind—avoid being crude or gross.

- ☐ What does it smell like?
- ☐ How does the smell make you feel or react?
- ☐ What does its smell remind you of?
- ☐ Other _____

Sound: Use the "Sound Words" lists at the back of this workbook.

- ☐ Does it make a noise or a sound?
- ☐ What do its sounds remind you of?
- ☐ Other _____

Perhaps you can come up with your own interesting questions as you investigate your object. Add them to the blank "Other" space under each category above.

Lesson 17: Skill Builder

Sentence Variation Review, Part 1

DAY ONE Paired Adjectives

Writing can become tired and boring if sentence structure is not varied. Paired Adjectives can begin sentences in a more interesting way, using words that relate together to describe the subject of the sentence.

A child can be bright and expressive or tearful and confused.

A wolf could be vicious and fearsome or exhausted and hungry.

Opposite pairs are also effective:

Fearful yet determined could describe a jittery athlete.

Excited but nervous might describe Liam as he gets ready to ride a roller coaster for the first time.

Alliteration (using words that start with the same sound) also adds interest:

wounded and weary

timid and tense

Be sure to place a comma after the paired adjectives. The paired adjectives must describe the subject immediately following the comma.

Example: The clown was humorous and jovial as he entertained the audience.

Correct: Humorous and jovial, the clown entertained the audience.

Incorrect: Humorous and jovial, the audience watched the entertaining clown.

Directions

A. Rewrite the following sentences to begin with paired adjectives.

1. The orphans were confused and hungry as they huddled together in the dark alley.

2. Jamie was tired yet exuberant when he won the drag race.

3. The rolling ripples of the lake were gentle and peaceful as they lapped the shore.

B. Combine the following sentences, beginning each with paired adjectives. When appropriate, use yet or but.

1. I surprised myself when I hit the home run. I was shocked.

2. Dad was enthusiastic when he told me tales about his childhood. He was animated as he described his adventures.

3. My huge St. Bernard likes to play fetch. He is gentle when we play.

4. The hurricane victims were cut and bruised. They emerged wearily from their shelter.

C. Sometimes it's fun to vary your use of a now-common sentence variation like paired adjectives. For instance, try developing more advanced paired adjective phrases.

Example

strong as an ox; mighty in spirit (subject: Paul Bunyan)

Strong as an ox and mighty in spirit, Paul Bunyan pushed down the pine trees and stopped the flood!

1. kind to animals; gentle-natured (subject: Jeremy)

2. enthusiastic pilot; avid fisherman (subject: Uncle Bob)

3. sweet as honey; golden brown (subject: Mom's muffins)

DAY TWO Similes

A simile is a figure of speech comparing two things that are basically unlike but have striking similarities. The words like and as help make the comparison. When writing a simile, ask yourself how the subject of your sentence behaves like or looks like something else with that you are familiar. For instance, how is a field like an ocean? How is a fierce storm like a hammer? How is a horse like a train? How is the sun like a great furnace?

Notice how the word like is generally used to compare a verb (action) and a noun (person, place, or thing).

- Each star twinkles like a jewel. (compares the verb "twinkled" with the noun "jewel")
- The rain thundered on the roof like a herd of wild ponies. (compares the verb "thundered" with the noun "ponies")

On the other hand, the word as usually compares two nouns that have similarities.

- The boy ran as swiftly as an eagle. (compares a swift boy with a swift eagle)
- Fluffy as cotton candy, the clouds drifted across the sky. (compares fluffy clouds with fluffy cotton candy)

Directions

A. Using similes, fill in the blanks. Be descriptive! Use several words in each blank. Stay away from tired, overused similes, such as "black as coal" or "black as night."

Acceptable: as high as a kite

Better: as high as a soaring kite

1. as black as _____
2. as crunchy as _____
3. sparkling like _____
4. as refreshing as _____
5. twirling like _____

A. Using similes, finish these sentence starters. Compare with "like" or "as."

1. My ice-cold glass of lemonade _____
2. The winter snow _____
3. The fire popped and crackled _____
4. The fog _____
5. From the rooftop, the city lights _____

DAY THREE Present Participles

A present participle is a verb ending in -ing. Present-participial phrases begin with an -ing verb. A sentence can begin with a single participle (one word) or with a participial phrase (two or more words).

Infinitive Verb Form	Present Participle
to argue	arguing
to fish	fishing
to hug	hugging

Directions

A. Write a present participle for the following verbs, and then add a word or group of words to make a participial phrase. Hint: A participle followed by a prepositional phrase creates an interesting participial phrase. You might also follow your participle with an adverb or noun.

Example: to sleep sleeping on the worn sofa (participle + prepositional phrase) to sing singing softly (participle + adverb) to eat eating barbecued burgers (participle + noun phrase)

1. to laugh: _____
2. to stroll: _____
3. to comfort: _____
4. to throw: _____
5. to explore: _____

B. Place an appropriate participle (or participial phrase) in the following sentences:

1. _____, the football player ran onto the field.
2. _____, two trapeze artists met in midair.
3. _____, a stranded surfer called for help.
4. _____, Maria counted her money.
5. _____, Jacob's team took the lead.

When you place a participial phrase at the beginning of a sentence, you must add a comma and then follow with the subject (who or what the sentence is about). The remaining information comes after the subject.

Example 1: Barking loudly, Max woke the entire family.

(participial phrase) (subject)

A sentence can also begin with the subject, followed by a comma and a participial phrase. The remainder of the sentence then follows the participial phrase.

Example 2: Max, barking loudly, woke the entire family.

(subject) (participial phrase)

C. Combine and rewrite the following sentences. On line “a,” begin with the participial phrase. On line “b,” begin with the subject followed by the participial phrase.

Example: The dog was sniffing the floor. The dog searched for food.

a. Sniffing the floor, the dog searched for food.

b. The dog, sniffing the floor, searched for food.

1. The girl was running down the hall. The girl dropped her books.

a. _____

b. _____

2. His dad was watching a movie. His dad ate pretzels.

a. _____

b. _____

3. Mom is expecting guests. Mom is baking a chocolate cake.

a. _____

b. _____

4. The ballerina floated like a butterfly. She danced gracefully.

a. _____

b. _____

Lesson 17: Student Writing Skills Checklist

After you write your "sloppy copy," go over it carefully with this checklist.

1. If you can answer "yes" to a question, place a check in the box.
2. If you answer "no," leave the box blank.
3. If the checklist asks you to do so, make marks or corrections on your "sloppy copy."
4. Use the checklist to help you edit your work before you revise it.
5. Once you have made changes and written your first revision, double-check your new draft again.

CONTENT (Check all drafts against this list.)

- ☐ Are my topic and choice of words appropriate for my audience?
- ☐ Did I describe the features of my object without telling a story or explaining its purpose?
- ☐ Do all sentences support my topic sentence (no "carrots in my cookie jar")?
- ☐ Does the title capture the essence of my composition?

STYLE (Check all drafts against this list.)

- ☐ Did I write a strong topic sentence that introduces my composition?
- ☐ Did I use no more than one "to be" word (is, am, are, was, were, be, being, been)? Circle to be words in red.
- ☐ Did I choose synonyms instead of repeating main words? Underline repeated words in blue.
- ☐ Did I use concrete words that are specific, vivid, and sensory? Underline vague/weak words in green and find synonyms for them.
- ☐ Have I correctly used these sentence variations in my composition?
If you did not use WriteShop I, only include these: If you are a continuing WriteShop student, also use these:
 ___ began a sentence with paired adjectives ___ began a sentence with an -ly adverb ___ began a sentence with a present participle ___ began a sentence with a prepositional phrase ___ included a simile ___ included an appositive ___ included a subject-verb sentence
- ☐ Have I included a sentence of six words or fewer?
- ☐ Did I write concisely by crossing out unnecessary words, phrases, or sentences?
- ☐ Did I write a strong closing sentence that gives a feeling of ending?

MECHANICS (Check all drafts against this list.)

- ☐ Did I put my name and date in the upper right-hand corner?
- ☐ Did I follow proper format on pp. ii-iii (correct placement/size of title; correct spacing, font size, etc.)?
- ☐ Does my paragraph have 6-9 sentences? How many? ____
- ☐ Did I indent the first sentence of the paragraph and leave margins around the text?
- ☐ Did I skip every other line? (If not, before rewriting, draw a light X on each line I need to skip.)
- ☐ Did I double-check my spelling? Circle suspected words; look up and make changes.
- ☐ Did I double-check capitalization and punctuation? Have I corrected any errors??
- ☐ Did I use complete sentences? Did I check for run-on sentences and misplaced modifiers?
- ☐ Did I correctly use this Checklist, including using colored pencils to underline and circle as directed? This includes making corrections before I write my revision.
- ☐ BEFORE TURNING IN MY WORK: Did I staple my papers together in order: Brainstorming worksheet on the bottom, "sloppy copy" on top of that, neat revision next, and this Writing Checklist on top?

Additional Comments and Feedback

Lesson 18: Describing a Place

Descriptive writing brings ordinary objects and events to life. It's an important skill to practice and develop.

You don't have to be there in person to write about a location or a setting. By drawing on your memory and creativity, you can still make the description colorful, concrete, and interesting for your reader. Using your senses to write a descriptive composition will make your readers feel like they're right there! Don't focus too sharply on any one object, animal, or scenic spot. Instead, give a broad picture of the entire place.

Think about how to describe a scenic painting to a friend. You wouldn't tell him only about the clouds or maple trees. You'd explain the entire setting, from sky to earth. To make it even more vivid, you might also describe the sound of the rushing river, the hoot of the owl, and the scent of wildflowers. Keep these thoughts in mind as you begin to write.

Don't confuse this assignment with narrative writing, which describes the sequence of events during an activity, like a birthday party, a hike to a waterfall, or a field trip to a museum. (We discuss narrative writing in later lessons.) This is still a descriptive writing assignment. Stay on target by following directions carefully. Write only about what you would experience with your senses. Here's an example.

A Walk in the Woods

by Hunter, age 16

Trekking through a dense forest, I breathe deeply to catch the refreshing fragrance of pine. A mountain breeze rustles the evergreen branches and sends dry needles scattering to the ground. Steep granite cliffs rise from the forest floor. Like giant sentinels, they keep silent watch over the woodland. Below me, a swollen brook follows the narrow trail. Sparkling and clear, the gurgling water splashes and dances over the smooth stones.

Along the bank, a mule deer and her spotted fawn drink from a quiet pool. A twig snaps. Nervously, the pair sprint into the dense thicket, disturbing a raucous blue jay. It fluffs its sapphire feathers, scolding and chattering as I round the bend. The forest, a haven for wildlife, hums and buzzes with the drone of mosquitoes and lazy yellow bees. As the day draws to a close, slanted shafts of sunlight filter across my path. I turn toward home and whisper goodbye to this sylvan paradise.

Directions

1. On the "Sensory Worksheet for Describing a Place" (p. 18-3), write one of the participial phrase sentence starters in the space provided. Place a comma after the last word and follow the comma with your subject, such as "I," "my cousin and I," or "Daniel and I." Finish the sentence by adding your own ending. This is your opening sentence.
2. Make a mind-map. Label each bubble with one of the five senses (sight, sound, smell, taste, texture). Fill in sensory details that describe your setting.
3. National park and National Geographic websites are good sources of ideas. You may find it helpful to have a photo in front of you before you begin brainstorming.
4. Using at least three of your senses, write your "sloppy copy" as two paragraphs. Each paragraph must be 5-7 sentences long.
 - Paragraph 1: Focus on scenery, such as landforms, plant life, and weather.
 - Paragraph 2: Focus mostly on wildlife, such as animals, birds, and insects.
5. Write in either present tense or past tense. Remain consistent by using the same tense throughout your composition. Whether you're writing in present or past tense, present participle sentence starters work with both.
6. Use a transition word from your "Transitions and Conjunctions" list (pp. 14-15) when you begin the second paragraph. (Even if it's not on your list, a prepositional phrase can sometimes make a good transition.) To better understand when to start a new paragraph, see below.
7. When making revisions, check that you've used all the sentence variations listed on your Student Writing Skills Checklist.
8. FOLLOW INSTRUCTIONS
 - Do not focus on your activity; the composition isn't about what YOU are doing. Your hike, walk, or trek is just a means to describe what your senses experience.
 - Do describe what you see, hear, smell, feel, or taste; the paragraph is about what's happening all around you.
 - Some narration will be necessary. Just be careful not to turn this into a story.

TRANSITIONS: When to Change Paragraphs

- When you shift to a different idea about the subject
- When you change the scene
- When you move ahead in time

Lesson 18: Sensory Worksheet for Describing a Place

Write your composition in first person, describing the account as if it has happened to you. Any of these starters may be modified to include just you, or they may include you and another person. Look at the example paragraph on p. 18-5 to see how to do this. If you add a character, don't build a story or create interaction between you and them.

Keep your attention on the scene.

Choose one of the following sentence starters:

- Trekking through a dense forest
- Crossing over the wooden bridge
- Meandering along the sandy shore
- Hiking through the Amazon jungle
- Discovering a walled garden
- Exploring the island's ancient ruins
- Stepping onto the surface of the alien planet
- Passing through the portal into a fantasy world

Examples: a) Trekking through a dense forest, my brother James and I scatter fallen oak leaves that litter our path. (present tense)

b) Crossing over the wooden bridge, I caught the music of the gurgling stream that flowed over the rocks below. (past tense)

Write your opening sentence. Begin with one of the sentence starters above. Follow the sentence starter with a comma. Write "I" (or "name and I") and finish the sentence.

Write several sensory words on each line. What might you see? Hear? Feel? Smell?

Sights: _____

Sounds: _____

Textures: _____

Smells: _____

Lesson 18: Practicing with Two Paragraphs

Directions

1. Read the paragraph below. Notice that it focuses on the scenery.
2. Write a closing sentence to end the first paragraph.
3. Use a transition word to begin a new paragraph.
4. Write your second paragraph. Continue on page 18-6 if you need more space.

Hiking down a desert trail, my brother and I kick clouds of dust behind us. Although we try to walk quietly, our feet crunch along the gravelly path. The sun, lowering in the afternoon sky, bakes us with its intensity. Heat waves rise from the ground like shimmering ribbons, distorting the scenery. Even the twisted old Joshua trees seem to quiver in the blistering air.

Sentence Variation Review, Part 2

DAY ONE Prepositional Phrases

A preposition is a relational word that usually tells "where" or "when." (Find a list of prepositions on p. 12 of the "Word Lists" section.) By itself, a preposition is useless in a sentence. To be a true preposition, and to make sense in the sentence, a preposition must be used in a prepositional phrase.

A prepositional phrase always begins with a preposition and always ends with a noun or a pronoun. Because a preposition is a relational word, it must relate to—or meet—an object.

DURING is a preposition. Let's look at two sentences that include the word during.

1. Instead of arriving at the beginning of the game, Lucas showed up during.

Because this sentence doesn't end in a noun or pronoun, during won't work as a preposition in this example. It doesn't state "during what." This means the sentence is written incorrectly.

2. Lucas showed up during the fifth inning.

Better! During the fifth inning is a complete prepositional phrase because the preposition (during) meets an object (inning).

Look at these:

Preposition

under since through

Object

her Grandma's bed

Tuesday

the steep-walled canyon

A. Using your list of prepositions (see Word Lists, p. 12), write three sentences beginning with prepositional phrases. Then, circle the prepositional phrase in ORANGE pencil.

1. _____

2. _____

3. _____

4. _____

B. Look through a book you're currently reading or studying. Find three sentences that begin with prepositional phrases and write them on the lines below. Then, circle the prepositional phrases with an ORANGE colored pencil.

1. _____

2. _____

3. _____

DAY TWO Adverbs

Adverbs tell how, when, where, and to what extent (how much or how long). To make a verb, adjective, or another adverb even more concrete, try adding an adverb.

Examples

Adverb added to a verb: Mia shouted to her brother. How did Mia shout?
 Mia shouted loudly to her brother.

Adverb added to an adjective: Friday was a clear day. To what extent was Friday clear?
 Friday was a delightfully clear day.

Adverb added to another adverb: Mateo caught the ball easily. How easily?
 Mateo caught the ball fairly easily.

Because adverbs can often be moved around within the sentence, you can vary the structure of a sentence by beginning with an adverb or adverbial phrase, that is an adverb followed by one or more words and a comma.

- Examples
1. The dog barked viciously.
 2. The dog viciously barked.
 3. Barking viciously, the dog woke the neighbors.
 4. Viciously, the dog barked, waking the neighbors.
 5. Viciously barking, the dog woke the neighbors.

All these ideas can add appeal to your writing. However, pay special attention to Numbers 4 and 5. See how beginning the sentence with a single adverb ("viciously") or an adverbial phrase ("viciously barking") make it even more interesting and effective?

Directions

- A. On the lines below, write three sentences of your own (or find examples in a book) that begin with a single adverb, as in Number 4 on the previous page: "Viciously, the dog _____. " Look at your "Adverbs (-ly)" word lists on p. 2 for ideas.

1. _____

2. _____

3. _____

Now circle each single adverb in PINK (or light red) colored pencil.

- B. On the lines below, write three sentences of your own (or find examples in a book) that begin with adverbial phrases, as in Number 5 on the previous page: ("Viciously barking, the dog _____. "

1. _____

2. _____

3. _____

Now circle each adverbial phrase in PINK (or light red) colored pencil.

DAY THREE Appositives

An appositive is a group of words that explains something in a sentence. It is always placed by the word it explains. You will set off your appositive with commas (unless it is a one-word name).

Appositives also serve the important function of helping eliminate "be" verbs from your writing. Note the bolded appositives in the following examples.

Shelby's aunt, the woman in the green dress, arrived from New York City.

His goal, to hit twenty home runs, seemed impossible to some.

My cousin Amelia wears pigtails in hot weather. (no comma for one-word names)

Shane, our team leader, carried a canvas pack.

Directions

Place a brown "x" on the "be" word in each of the following sentences. Then combine the sentence pairs. Use an appositive in each and eliminate the "be" word.

1. Margaret Smith is the museum curator. She supervises the dinosaur exhibit.

2. Mr. Elway's mailbox is a red airplane. It attracts attention in our neighborhood.

3. I delivered flowers to Mrs. Monroe. Mrs. Monroe is my piano teacher.

4. My uncle is a policeman. My uncle visited Parker School to talk about neighborhood crime.

5. We camped in Yosemite. Yosemite is a majestic national park.

6. Please take this note to Senator Smith. Senator Smith is the man in the striped shirt.

7. Joy's desire was to visit Mexico. Her desire became a reality last March.

Now take a BROWN colored pencil and circle the appositive in sentences 1-7.

CONTENT

- ☐ Are my topic and choice of words appropriate for my audience?
- ☐ Does the first paragraph mainly describe the scenery (landforms, plant life, weather)?
- ☐ Does the second paragraph mainly describe the wildlife (animals, birds, insects)?
- ☐ Did I use at least three of the five senses to describe this scene?
- ☐ Did I focus on my surroundings without focusing on my actions or feelings?
- ☐ Do all sentences support the topic sentence (no "carrots in my cookie jar")?
- ☐ Does my content flow smoothly? Did I organize the details in a way that makes sense to the reader?
- ☐ Does the title capture the essence of my composition?

STYLE

- ☐ Did I write a strong topic sentence that begins with one of the required sentence starters?
- ☐ Did I use no more than one form of "to be" in each paragraph? (is, am, are, was, were, be, being, been) Circle to be words in red.
- ☐ Did I choose synonyms instead of repeating main words? Underline repeated words in blue.
- ☐ Did I use concrete words that are specific, vivid, and sensory? Underline vague/weak words in green.
- ☐ Did I use a transition word or phrase to connect my paragraphs? Write it here _____
- ☐ Did I consistently use the same tense throughout the composition?
- ☐ Have I correctly used all of these throughout my composition?
 - ___began with paired adjectives ___began with a present participle
 - ___began with an -ly adverb ___included an appositive
 - ___began with a prepositional phrase ___included a simile (one only)
- ☐ Have I included several subject-verb sentences?
- ☐ Have I included a sentence of six or fewer words?
- ☐ Did I write concisely by crossing out unnecessary words, phrases, or sentences?
- ☐ Did I write a strong closing sentence that gives a feeling of ending?

MECHANICS

- ☐ Did I put my name and date in the upper right-hand corner?
- ☐ Is each paragraph 5-7 sentences long? How many sentences? 1st____ 2nd____
- ☐ Did I indent the first sentence of each paragraph and leave margins around the text?
- ☐ Did I skip every other line? If not, before rewriting, draw a light X on each line I need to skip.
- ☐ Did I double-check my spelling? Circle suspected words; look up and make changes.
- ☐ Did I double-check capitalization and punctuation? Have I corrected any errors??
- ☐ Did I use complete sentences? Did I check for run-on sentences and misplaced modifiers?
- ☐ Did I make a mind-map during brainstorming and attach it with my drafts?
- ☐ Did I correctly use this Checklist along with colored pencils? Did I make corrections before revising?
- ☐ BEFORE TURNING IN MY WORK: Did I staple my papers together in this order: Worksheet on bottom, "sloppy copy" on top of that, neatly rewritten copy next, and this Checklist on top?

Lesson 19: Writing a Short Report

In the past, you've probably written a factual report about an animal or famous person. Today's lesson teaches you how to expand a single paragraph into a three-paragraph animal report or biography.

Gather Your Resources

To present facts about your subject, always begin with research. Gather TWO of the following: a short book, book chapter, or Internet article either about one animal or a famous person. Make sure these combined resources give you enough information.

Plan your report using the appropriate "Fact-Gathering Worksheet" on p. 19-7 or p. 19-9.

Research Your Topic

Don't Plagiarize. Any time you collect information from outside sources, avoid plagiarism above all else. Plagiarism (copying another person's written work to write your own story or report) is stealing. What's stolen is an author's unique way of putting thoughts in their own words.

Always guard against the temptation to copy another's work and call it your own. How do you gather facts without copying? The key is to jot down words or phrases (never whole sentences!) that give you the basic information. Later, you will write sentences that express those ideas in your own distinctive words and voice.

Here's an example of facts about the icy Arctic waters.

"Icy water contains more oxygen and carbon dioxide than warm water, which makes it rich in marine life. Plankton is up to twenty times more abundant in the Arctic and Antarctic than it is in the warm waters of the tropics" (Wildlife Fact File, Blue Whale).

- ☐ To take notes, write down the facts you found in the above paragraph. Use only enough main words to jog your memory. Substitute synonyms whenever possible.

ARCTIC AND ANTARCTIC WATERS

- more O₂, CO₂ in frigid water
- more marine life
- 20 times more plankton than tropical water

- ☐ When it's time to write your sentence, combine the facts into your own words, like this:

Because frigid waters contain more carbon dioxide and oxygen than warm tropical oceans, up to twenty times more plankton and other marine life flourish in the Arctic and Antarctic.

See how the same facts are written using different words? Use this technique to write your factual paragraph. You will find it useful whenever you write future reports!

Understand Outlining

Preparing an outline may be a new skill for you. This basic information helps you better understand the purpose of outlining.

☐ What is an outline?

An outline is a summary of the main topics or ideas of your report. It is a:

1. Method of putting your composition in order by doing some preliminary thinking.
2. Useful tool for organizing your thoughts about a subject.
3. List of topics to discuss and the order in which you'll introduce them.
4. Way to arrange your research notes to plan the content and organization of your report.

☐ What does an outline do?

1. Organizes ideas and information you want to include in your research paper.
2. Gives a clear understanding of how your report will be structured.
3. Helps you decide exactly what you want to say.
4. Keeps you from losing direction and becoming sidetracked.
5. Helps you express your thoughts freely and smoothly.
6. Ensures you have included everything you want to include, and helps you put this information in a logical order.

☐ How is an outline structured?

Whether it is short and simple or long and complicated, the steps to making an outline are the same.

1. List the important points about the subject.
2. Classify your supporting facts and ideas into meaningful groups that make sense.
3. Decide on the best way to present the material clearly and effectively. For example:
 - Time sequence (when writing about a person or a historical event or time period)
 - Order of importance (for reports that explain "why" or "how")
 - General to specific (when writing about scientific topics)
4. Like the finished report, your outline needs a beginning, middle, and end.

Create Your Outline

As you take notes about your animal or famous person, you will see that the information falls nicely into two or three main categories:

Animal

- I. Animal's physical characteristics
- II. Animal's habitat
- III. Animal's living habits and behavior

Person

- I. Early years
- II. Adulthood
- III. Main Accomplishments

When you prepare your outline, each of these categories will become a main point that you will support with details, examples, and illustrations. If you write about an animal, your finished outline will look something like this:

Striped Skunk

- I. Physical characteristics
 - A. Size: About the size of a cat
 - B. Covering and coloring
 - 1. Fur coat
 - 2. Shiny black with a white stripe
 - C. Special or interesting body parts
 - 1. Plume-like tail
 - 2. Short stubby legs
 - 3. Defensive spray called musk
 - a. Foul-smelling liquid sprayed when frightened or in danger
 - b. Comes from glands beneath tail
 - c. Can spray as far as 12 feet
- II. Habitat
 - A. Location: United States, Canada, and northern Mexico
 - B. Habitat: Woodland forests
 - C. Home
 - 1. Hollow log or cavity under a rock
 - 2. Deserted burrow or denlined with dry leaves
 - 3. Hole in ground

III. Habits and behavior

A. Eating

1. Feeds on grubs, berries, grain, eggs of ground-building birds, insects (especially grasshoppers), mice and rats
2. Fasts in winter, lives off stored body fat

B. Sleeping: Nocturnal (sleeps during day)

C. Moving

1. Slow-moving
2. Gentle, non-aggressive

D. Other behaviors

1. Respected by other animals, few natural enemies
2. Gives warning before spraying by stamping feet, hissing, growling
3. Gives birth to four or five young at one time

You probably noticed that every main point is supported by at least two sub-points. For every A, there must be a B. For every 1, there must be a 2, and so on. If it can't be supported by two subpoints, the information should be contained within the single main point.

Write Your Report

Write a three-paragraph report. Again, put the facts into your own words.

1. Begin your first paragraph with an interesting, eye-catching sentence that grabs the reader's attention and introduces your subject. This can be anything fascinating, unusual, or noteworthy you've learned about the subject.
2. Devote the rest of the paragraph to Main Point I.
3. The second paragraph discusses Main Point II. Use a transition word to connect the two paragraphs.
4. The third paragraph covers Main Point III. Begin this paragraph with a transition word as well. End with a strong closing sentence that wraps up your report.

You can sequence your three main points in any order—as long as you don't jump back and forth within the report. In other words, don't describe the animal's fur, then its eating habits, followed by its habitat, followed by a description of its facial features.

The same holds true for a biography---keep similar ideas together, making sure the information flows smoothly. It helps to write a biography chronologically (following a time sequence).

5. Also, you don't have to use every fact you collect. Use only the ones that make sense in your composition.
6. Refer to your Student Checklist to be sure you use required sentence variations. Use each sentence variation (except for the simile) at least once (twice if you can). Don't overuse any one type of sentence variation, and don't begin two sentences in a row with the same sentence starter.
7. When you write your short report, be sure your nouns and pronouns agree. If you refer to your animal or biographical character in singular terms, your pronouns must agree by being singular as well. Likewise, if you use plural words for your animal or person, use plural pronouns.
8. Choose an appropriate ending sentence to wrap up your informative report. If you are writing an animal report, don't end with a sentence like this:

This is why I like the skunk.

These are the reasons why skunks are interesting.

I think skunks would make neat pets.

Reminders

- ☐ Each paragraph must be 5-8 sentences long.
- ☐ Your closing sentence must give your composition a feeling of ending.
- ☐ Do not give an opinion (such as "I think").
- ☐ Do use a general thought, such as:

The gentle skunk is a fascinating mammal.

Gentle and shy, skunks live peacefully among the animals of the forest.

Persistent and determined, Amelia Earhart paved the way for women in the field of aviation.

- ☐ Print out or make a photocopy of each source. Attach it to your composition before turning it in.

Lesson 19: Animal Fact-Gathering Worksheet

Directions: Using your selected material, gather the following facts about your animal. The more information you collect, the more you will be able to draw from when you begin to write. Write down more information than you think you will use.

Using this worksheet, jot down notes about your animal. Do not copy sentences.

Name of your animal _____

I. Animal's Body

- A. Size (avoid uninteresting details such as exact measurements. Maybe you could make a comparison to something familiar, like "about the size of a house cat" or "weighs as much as a car.")

- B. Color and type of covering

- C. Special or interesting body parts

II. Animal's Habitat

A. Location (states, countries, or continents) _____

B. Type of habitat (do not confuse with "habits") _____

C. Type of home (cave, den, burrow) _____

III. Other Behaviors

A. Eating _____

B. Sleeping _____

C. Moving _____

D. Other _____

Synonyms for Your Animal

Hint: In your article, look for words like predator, hunter, fish, beast, herbivore, etc.

B. Other contributions or accomplishments _____

Sentence Variation Review, Part 3

DAY ONE Personification

- Personification is a figure of speech that gives human traits to something as if it were human.
- Personification is different from a simile. A simile says, "This is like this," but personification says, "This behaves like a person."

Simile Like fingers, the branches of the tree reached toward the hiker.

Personification The branches' fingers reached out toward the hiker.

- Human characteristics can be given to objects and, sometimes, to animals.
 1. The wispy clouds skated gracefully across the sky. (Skating is a human trait.)
 2. Bright pansies lift their bobbing heads. (Lifting heads is a human trait.)
 3. Night crept silently over the countryside. (Creeping is a human trait.)
 4. Twinkling stars danced in dark. (Dancing is a human trait.)

Directions

- A. In green, circle the "thing" that is being compared to a person. In red, underline the human traits, characteristics, or actions that were given to that thing.
1. (Example) The snowflakes danced and twirled through the air.
 2. The front porch groaned under Betsy's feet.
 3. From a high branch, a fussy squirrel bossed our dog.
 4. Frank's restored Chevy proudly boasted a new coat of paint.
 5. Sighing loudly, the wind blew through the willow branches.
 6. A gathering of crows mocked me from the telephone wires.
- B. Poetry is filled with examples of personification. Below, circle the "thing" that's being compared to a person. Underline the human traits, characteristics, or actions that were given to that thing. Use the same colors as above.
1. The rain has silver sandals / For dancing in the spring . . . – May Justus, "The Rain Has Silver Sandals"
 2. The Moon comes every night to peep / Through the window where I lie . . . – James Stephens, "The White Window"
 3. How they will tell the shipwreck / When winter shakes the door . . . – Emily Dickinson, "Rouge Gagne"
 4. How glorious to wake each morn by a gentle sun kiss / puckered through one's window blinds. – Robert Louis Stevenson, "Summer Sun"

DAY TWO Using Past Participles as Adjectives

Of course you remember that a present participle (or "-ing" verb) is written as running, speaking, or galloping. A past participle, on the other hand, usually ends with "-ed" or "-en," as in chosen, erased, and gathered. (Irregular past participles include taught, worn, and flown.)

Both the present and past participle forms of a verb can be used as adjectives.

Frequently, these are placed in front of the noun or pronoun they describe. For example, a child can have a pleased look. Mom can set aside a bowl of beaten eggs. Josh can put on his running shoes. A book can display a worn cover.

This exercise gives practice developing sentences that begin with a past participial phrase. In the word bank below you will find subjects preceded by past participles that function as adjectives. (Remember that a verb functioning as another part of speech is called a verbal.)

burned cookies	beaten eggs	dented fender
angered customer	saddened grandfather	broken toy
washed clothes	embarrassed performer	sweetened tea
outdated laptop	parked Lamborghini	hidden treasure

Directions

1. On p. 19-13, write five sentences that begin with a past participial phrase. You may choose from the word bank above or come up with your own ideas.
2. Follow each phrase with a comma.
3. The subject must closely follow the comma.
4. Add supporting details to expand and finish the sentence.
5. Do not use any "to be" words!

For example, if you choose the phrase "crammed backpack," you might write this sentence:

Crammed with books, Caden's backpack weighed thirty pounds.

Example phrase: chopped wood

Chopped into logs, the firewood lay in a pile by the barn.

Chopped and stacked by the barn, the pile of firewood will surely last all winter.

1. Phrase: _____

2. Phrase: _____

3. Phrase: _____

4. Phrase: _____

5. Phrase: _____

DAY THREE

Directions

Follow the instructions for the Day Two activity, writing five more sentences in the spaces below. Choose your phrases from the word bank on Day Two.

1. Phrase: _____

2. Phrase: _____

3. Phrase: _____

4. Phrase: _____

5. Phrase: _____

Unit 5:

Expanding Your Skills

Lesson 20: Exaggeration

Television commercials, online advertisements, and other sales materials successfully influence today's buyers. They do this through clever writing that praises the product's excellent qualities. Below (or on a separate sheet of paper), make a list naming different types of advertising that come into your home or that you see around town. Include a variety of sources.

- ☐ (example) Flyers _____
- ☐ _____
- ☐ _____
- ☐ _____
- ☐ _____

Advertisers use vivid description to impress (and thereby influence) customers. At times, they even exaggerate their claims about a product to make it sound almost too good to be true. Do these look familiar to you?

- Diet fads that assure instant weight loss
- Kitchen gadgets promising you will cook like a gourmet chef
- Exercise machines that "guarantee" bulging biceps in 30 days
- Beauty products claiming to reverse sun damage or eliminate wrinkles

Writing a Travel Advertisement

Have you ever traveled with your family to a place that sounded sensational in the ads, only to arrive and wonder what the fuss was all about? You may remember from history books how people were lured to America from England, or convinced to travel west, based on what they saw in the newspaper. Using descriptive, colorful words, skilled writers stretched the truth to make those places sound appealing.

This assignment, using a similar approach, gives you a fresh understanding of the power of words.

As you've been learning, descriptive writing brings ordinary objects and events to life. In this lesson, you'll get to try something new with descriptive writing as you write an exaggerated travel advertisement for a resort that's fallen on hard times. Drawing from your skills as a descriptive writer, you'll paint a glowing picture of a travel destination that hopes to draw tourists to improve its dying economy.

This location is not all it is cracked up to be! Perhaps a fire, flood, or other natural disaster has caused damage to the area. Maybe the place has become run-down or weather beaten and is in need of repair. Maybe it is the "off" season, when the weather is either too hot, too cold, or too humid. In any case, tourism is down, and the resort owners have hired you to persuade travelers to bring their families for a stay.

The purpose of this assignment is not to teach you to deceive, but to make you aware of the power of words to influence and entice. This exercise helps you stretch your creativity as well as increase your awareness of persuasive advertising techniques.

Understanding Exaggeration

Webster's New Universal Unabridged Dictionary defines exaggerate as "to represent (something) as greater than it is." In your first paragraph you'll portray this location as it appears. Then, in the second paragraph, you'll use exaggeration to describe the resort's accommodations and scenery in an idealistic way.

For example, the dried-up remains of a pond might be represented as a "refreshing lake." A beach strewn with litter from a storm could instead be a "driftwood-decorated shoreline." Encouraging visitors to "enjoy a glorious afternoon on horseback" would fail to mention that the resort only has two old swayback mares.

☐ Read for Ideas

Gather a few of the following materials from online sources, a travel agency, the library, or your own bookshelves.

- Travel blogs
- "Bucket list travel" websites
- "All-inclusive family resorts" websites
- Destinations
- Travel magazines, brochures, or Auto Club publications
- National Geographic magazine or website

To see how writers describe scenic resorts, browse through several ads or articles. Look for key words that appeal to the senses or emotions, like paradise, romantic, hideaway, famous for, etc. Below (or on a separate page) make a list of words you find.

Overview of Your Composition

1. Discuss the instructions with your parent or teacher to make sure you understand the assignment.

2. Choose the Setting

- Run-down dude ranch
- Beach resort after a hurricane
- Desert hotel with a "pool" and/or "mineral hot springs" nearby
- Mountain resort with individual family cabins
- Ancient castle in Scotland, England, Germany, or France
- Tropical island during monsoon or hurricane season
- Golf resort during a drought
- Frigid location during the winter (think freezing!)
- Lakeside boating resort
- Your own idea _____

3. Begin with brainstorming.

Tip: Try this as an activity around the dinner table. Sometimes it's fun to involve the whole family in the brainstorming process!

- In the first column of the "Exaggeration Worksheet (p. 20-7)," write about what the place actually looks like. In the second column, jot down ways you could exaggerate those same accommodations to sound appealing. Remember to come up with more information than you'll need in your composition. This gives you a larger pool of details to draw from when writing your "sloppy copy."
 - Facilities. Discuss the comforts and conveniences that appeal to vacationers (lodging, pools, restaurants and food, shopping, nearby attractions, entertainment, etc.). Then brainstorm specifically about the things that would draw people to your resort.
 - Scenic Environment. Talk about the kinds of scenery that attract sightseers (autumn leaves, forests, beaches, mineral hot springs, tropical vegetation, snow, natural wonders, bodies of water, historic buildings or monuments, etc.). Then brainstorm about the scenery that would entice visitors to your resort.
4. Activities. Next, talk about the kinds of activities that might lure a tourist (biking or hiking; camping, fishing, or horseback riding; sightseeing tours; winter sports; water sports and boating; nature activities; amusement or water parks; etc.). Then brainstorm in detail about the activities that would draw visitors to your resort.

5. Write two paragraphs.

- Paragraph 1: Accurately describe the resort with facts—run-down, drafty, and isolated, for instance. This paragraph should not sound like an ad.
- Paragraph 2: This is the advertisement, where you'll exaggerate and stretch the truth—provincial, airy, and private.

6. Write each paragraph on a SEPARATE page. Each must be 7-9 sentences.

7. Give your resort a realistic name.

8. Set the stage with a strong topic sentence.

9. Hide the imperfections of the resort with colorful, flowery words. Just be sure the wording fits the locale. In your second paragraph, describe the resort as if it were in perfect condition. Help the reader see the place through "rose-colored glasses." Overstate, pad, stretch the truth—but within reason. For example, if your resort has a small spa with cracked tile and algae stains, you might exaggerate by calling it a sparkling swimming pool, but you can't call it a lake.

10. Overemphasize the true, positive elements. A miserably humid tropical location might still have a magnificent sunset. Blooming weeds can be called "flowers." "Run-down" becomes "rustic." A scorching desert sun sounds more appealing as "warm rays of the sun." Greasy burgers from a roadside diner become "juicy" or "finger-licking." Readers never know that the "lake stocked with fish" has not been stocked in ten years!

11. Use rich imagery and the most descriptive, vivid words. Your Word Lists and thesaurus are required tools. Use synonyms accurately. Know their definitions. The right words can make a cheap motel sound like a luxurious hotel or make a thatched, weedy hillside sound breathtakingly beautiful. Give the impression the place is up to date and well maintained, perfect for a visiting couple or family.

12. Use vocabulary that appeals to the senses and emotions. Refer to the previous page for some of the terms you found in magazines. Words like exotic and private have irresistible drawing power!

13. Don't describe every single detail when writing. Pick several and go from there. Use the practice paragraph as a guide.

14. Make an emotional appeal in your closing sentence. How do you want the reader to respond? Use words like imagine, picture yourself, trip of a lifetime, visit, plan, discover, reserve, sign up, book your, don't miss, or package deal.

Lesson 20: Practicing with Exaggeration

Directions

1. Read the following paragraph. Then write a second paragraph exaggerating the claims of Paradise Palms Resort.
2. Begin by brainstorming. Use the "Exaggeration Worksheet (Practice Paragraph)" on p. 20-6.
3. Fill in the first column of the worksheet with facts you read about in the paragraph about Paradise Palms Resort.
4. Fill in the second column with ways you could exaggerate those same features to make them sound appealing.

Paradise Palms Resort

Looking abandoned along the deserted highway, the Paradise Palms Resort sits back from the road in a sparse grove of shaggy palm trees. Weathered and peeling, its chipped salmon-colored paint begs for a fresh coat. A sagging porch, overgrown with bougainvilleas, offers little shelter from the sweltering tropical heat. Aging canvas umbrellas and beach chairs droop wearily around a yellowed pool. Mosquitoes drone over the filmy surface. A sliver of ocean in the distance promises relief from the soaring temperatures, but a weedy trail seems to be the only path. Next to the dilapidated motel, a simple thatched hut displays local fruits and cheap trinkets for sale, and an easygoing native in a ragged straw hat pushes jeeps and bicycles for rent. His selection, however, appears as rusty and tired as the old resort itself. Paradise Palms, so it seems, is a long way from paradise.

Lesson 20: Skill Builder

Word Usage

How does an author find balance between writing in a concrete, sensory, descriptive manner and writing in an imposing, pretentious way? In WriteShop, we encourage you to try out new words, have fun with your thesaurus, and use vivid language as you write. We also want to teach you to use new vocabulary with care and humility.

When you include a lot of new or strange words, readers get the feeling you're trying too hard to make an impression. Too many flowery, unfamiliar words can make you sound like a know-it-all.

Instead, work to find a healthy balance between simple and "stuffy" vocabulary. Wise writers choose their words carefully so their writing is descriptive yet concise.

Tips to Remember

- ☐ Try not to use too many long words.
- ☐ Make sure the vocabulary is appropriate for your reader.
- ☐ Instead of stringing together a long list of adjectives to describe a weak noun, a single well-chosen noun often does the trick. For instance, "skyscraper" is much cleaner than "tall, thirty-story glass-covered building," yet it's still descriptive.
- ☐ Choose synonyms carefully. When using your thesaurus, always look up unfamiliar synonyms so you say exactly what you mean. Before finding a synonym for the word party, understand what kind of party you're writing about. Though synonyms include soirée, fete, bash, or coalition, they can't be used interchangeably. That's because each word describes something very different.
 - Soirée: A dressy evening affair
 - Fete: An outdoor party
 - Bash: An occasion of joy or celebration
 - Coalition: A political alliance.

Which one did you mean? Can you see why it's important to choose synonyms carefully?

- ☐ When replacing a word, choose a synonym that's the same part of speech. Depending how they're used in a sentence, dance, bear, and spy can function as nouns or verbs. Synonyms for these words may not be interchangeable.
- ☐ Avoid words that are informal, slang, or archaic (so old it is not in use anymore). Again, look up unfamiliar words in the dictionary. This extra step can save you from embarrassment later!

DAY ONE Communicating Clearly

Directions

1. Use a dictionary to define these terms. Think about how they might relate to your writing.
2. If there is more than one definition, choose the one that would apply to writing.

concise _____

effective _____

flowery _____

grandiose _____

pompous _____

pretentious _____

verbose _____

DAY TWO Incorrect Word Usage

The following sentences contain incorrectly used words. As you've been learning, words can have subtle differences in meaning. For instance, a mansion, cabin, or shack may be called a house, but not all houses are mansions. Neither is every house a cabin or shack.

Make sure the synonym you choose fits the context of the sentence. Incorrect word usage is characterized by long, uncommon words, incorrectly used synonyms, and words that aren't relevant to the topic.

Directions

Using your thesaurus or dictionary, find an appropriate word to replace the bold words below.

1. The ancient log chateau was nearly swallowed by the dense forest. Arboreal formations crowded in on every side.

chateau _____

arboreal formations _____

2. The dense foliage obfuscated the narrow path leading to the infinitesimal cabin and threatened to smother it.

obfuscated _____

infinitesimal _____

3. Towering trees cast their adumbrations over the nugatory shack.

adumbrations _____

nugatory _____

DAY THREE Overly Descriptive Writing

The sentences on the next page include words or phrases that are overly descriptive. This can mean any of the following:

- Sentences are too wordy or too long.
- The writer confuses the reader by using too many adjectives and adverbs.
- Repetition or flowery description cloud the writing.
- Pretentious, puffed-up language and too many figures of speech (metaphors, similes, and personification) make the writing ineffective or hard to follow.

Fancy language has its place, especially when describing spectacular events or smug, stuck-up people. It's easy for beginning writers to become wordy or overly descriptive when writing about simple, ordinary things. Flowery writing may be appropriate to describe an elaborate costume ball, but it probably wouldn't work if you're writing about a visit to a dude ranch.

A bit of pretentious writing will probably work well in this week's assignment as you look for ways to exaggerate and embellish the claims of a rundown resort. Just remember: no matter what you're writing about, keep both your topic and audience in mind when choosing words.

Directions

- ☐ Rewrite each sentence in a concise yet descriptive way.
- ☐ Break down long phrases and ask yourself, "What is this trying to say? How could I write it more simply?"
- ☐ Use a dictionary or thesaurus to look up unfamiliar words. If you don't know what they mean, you won't be able to simplify them!
- ☐ Eliminate repeated words and words that contradict other thoughts in the sentence.

1. Before the noisy, creaking, overloaded wagons, filled with tools, provisions, and food, arrived at the majestic mansion, they stopped and paused to rest in front of a dilapidated, weather-beaten, shabby shanty.

2. The stacked orbs of snow, magnificently embellished with fragments of coal and carrots and wrapped in a long, fringed plaid scarf, commenced to slump and grow slushy and turn into a puddle precisely at the location where Dad parks his automobile.

3. Sam's extremely furry, shaggy canine dog, alabaster with raven streaks, poses enthusiastically on the porch in front of the family domicile, with his tail solemnly between his legs. He lingers until Sam reappears from the park where he has been recreating in the baseball game at which his team triumphed.

Lesson 20: Student Writing Skills Checklist

After you write your "sloppy copy," go over it carefully with this checklist. Use COLUMN 1 to check your realistic paragraph and use COLUMN 2 to check your exaggerated paragraph.

Lesson 21: First-Person Point of View, Part 1

You can influence your reader's feelings through your writing. Your words have the power to guide the reader's emotions by the way you describe objects and situations. This is called point of view.

Everything you write or read has a point of view; it is not something you choose to include or not include. Point of view is the telling of a story, experience, or event through the eyes of one character. When characters are part of the situation, they usually tell a story using the first-person narrative voice. In other words, they include themselves in the story and writes from an "I" perspective. An author writing in first person can't know what everything or everyone else in the story is thinking. This is called limited omniscience.

The author's personal perspective influences the reader's emotions. The writer can make the reader feel suspicious, sympathetic, or angry toward different characters. He also has the power to make an amusement park ride seem thrilling and exciting or terrifying and upsetting. A good writer can make readers cry—or laugh out loud.

This assignment in descriptive narration covers two lessons in which you describe a situation twice, each time from a different point of view. The first assignment, Lesson 21, asks you to write from the point of view of a parent spending an afternoon with his or her child at a picnic. Since you'll write as if you're a mom or dad, you won't be able to know what anyone else is thinking. Describe the scene and the situation just the way you see it. (The next assignment, Lesson 22, teaches you how to change perspective.)

As you describe this lunchtime picnic scene, invite your reader to enjoy a variety of things the parent sees, hears, and smells. Set a mood with vivid descriptions.

Write in first person ("I") and in present tense (as if it is happening now). Your task is to influence the reader's feelings about this picnic and to create a highly sensory and descriptive scene. We start you off with a topic sentence.

Directions

1. Decide on a setting for your picnic. Picnic ground at: ___a beach ___a lake ___a park ___a campground ___other _____
2. Look over the lists on the next page to consider what the parent might see, hear, and smell. (This is not a complete list; you certainly may think of other things.)
3. Brainstorm by making columns or by making a mind-map. Brainstorm thoroughly so you have many sensory descriptions from which to choose. Here are some ideas.

What the parent sees:

- Bright colors of clothing
- Cheerful, smiling faces
- Playground equipment, benches, tables, umbrellas, blankets, ice chests
- Lake, ocean, beach, or pool; trees, flowers, sand, rocks, or grass
- Fast movement of excited kids running, splashing, swinging
- Eating (and throwing away) picnic foods and dessert, such as dripping ice cream, thick sandwiches, or juicy red watermelon

What the parent hears:

- Loud laughter/talking/playing
- Distant sounds (airplane droning, dog barking, siren wailing, horn honking)
- Soda cans, ice, the rustle and pop of paper bags, the crunching of apples or chips
- Banging, crashing, splashing; the squeaking of swings or other play equipment
- Noise of speedboats on the lake, waves crashing, birds, sprinklers, bells on ice cream trucks or bicycles
- Fireworks or a parade going by; roller skates or skateboard wheels on a sidewalk; the thump of a bouncing basketball; the crack of a baseball bat

What the parent smells:

- freshly mown grass, roses
- sea breeze, suntan lotion, campfires or barbecues
- broiling hotdogs, steaks, chicken, or burgers
- baked beans, popcorn, pickles and mustard, or other picnic foods

4. Begin with this topic sentence:

You can individualize this sentence, but keep it similar, maybe adding an adjective:

- the seaside picnic area . . .
- the sheltered picnic area . . .

5. You have limited omniscience. You're the parent at the picnic, so put yourself in their place and write as if you are that person. Include your emotions as well as your observations. If your character didn't observe the action, he or she can't write about it firsthand. Write only what your character knows.

6. Do not describe everything the parent experiences!

7. Do not focus on describing the activities; focus on the experiential and sensory.

8. Do not use the phrases I smell, I see, I hear. Try:
 - Broiling hot dogs (do what) instead of I smell hot dogs as they broil . . .
 - Red and white sailboats (do what) instead of I see white and red sailboats
 - The shouts of children (doing what) or laughing children (doing what) instead of I hear children shouting (or laughing)
9. Use different kinds of sentence starters and sentence variations. Use each of these at least once:
 - sentence beginning with a present and a past participle
 - sentence beginning with a prepositional phrase
 - sentence beginning with an adverb or adverbial phrase
 - sentence beginning with paired adjectives
 - sentence using a simile
 - sentence using an appositive
 - subordinate conjunction
 - a short sentence (six words or fewer)
10. Write two paragraphs of 5-7 sentences each.
11. Practice writing concisely. Eliminate all unnecessary sentences, words, or phrases. Keep your descriptions crisp yet simple. Write for clarity.
12. Use concrete, specific, descriptive words (see your various Word Lists for help). Describe activities sparingly, more as a vehicle for sensory description. Here are some suggestions for making your writing specific, vivid, and sensory. Notice the use of different sentence variations.
 - Squabbling over stale crusts, a raucous crowd of gulls flaps around our blanket.
 - A radiant orange sunset paints the sky with a wash of lavender and rose.
 - Softly, a cool afternoon breeze whispers through the lofty branches of the white pines. ("-ly" adverb)
 - Like young otters, playmates romp and splash wildly in the foamy surf. (simile)
 - Spreading Grandma's patchwork quilt beneath an ancient oak, we marvel at the blaze of autumn golds and reds surrounding us. (participial phrase)
 - Box kites and paper dragons fill the azure sky, whipping their tails in the wind.
13. Be sure your tenses agree. You must write in present tense.
14. Use a transition word or phrase to connect the two paragraphs.

Lesson 21: Identifying Descriptive Narration

Directions

Read the following narrative and complete the activities below.

Our Park Picnic

by Ben, age 13

Vivid colors and lively sounds radiate from the picnic area where my children play. Filling the patchy sky, kites of red, navy, and orange whip their tails in the wind. Animated and delighted, my son Jeff yanks at his taut string, searching for his kite among the others. His face beams with pride at the victory of his first flight. Across the field, a soccer game begins with an ear-splitting whistle.

Suddenly smelling smoke, I turn to my hamburgers and give them a final flip. On the wooden table, bowls of baked beans and pasta salads lift their pungent aromas into the gentle breeze. Setting the platter of cooked meat on the red checkered cloth, I yell for Jeff. Upon reeling in his airplane kite, my hungry little boy rushes to our spot. Settled down to our feast, we talk over the exciting events of the day.

- ☐ In red, underline words or phrases that describe feelings and emotions.
- ☐ In blue, underline words or phrases that describe the child(ren)'s behavior/actions.
- ☐ Use a purple pencil to circle sound words or phrases.
- ☐ Use a green pencil to circle color words or phrases.
- ☐ Circle smell words or phrases in orange.

Writing Descriptive Narration, Part 1

When learning to write narratives, it's easy to focus on the action and forget to add important descriptive details. This exercise will help you see the difference between simple narration and descriptive narration. WriteShop encourages you to write descriptively so you can tell your readers exactly what you want them to know.

Suppose you read this sentence: Tyson ran across the field. What picture jumps into your mind? How did Tyson run? What was the field like? What feeling should this stir up in you?

Now look at these expanded sentences. Each one tells you that Tyson ran across the field, but each also gives you a different picture of the event and/or circumstances.

Example A: Panting heavily, Tyson ran desperately across the littered field toward safety.

Example B: Relaxed and free, Tyson eagerly ran across the sunny field of daisies.

Example C: With visions of victory in his head, Tyson ran deftly across the soccer field toward the goal.

Directions

1. The narrative sentences on the following pages lack important descriptive detail. Rewrite each sentence to give the reader the specific picture you have in your mind.
2. Use synonyms to replace some of the words.
3. Also add interesting details to expand the sentence.
4. Use a DIFFERENT sentence variation in each sentence (paired adjectives, past or present participial phrase, prepositional or adverbial phrase, subordinate conjunction, appositives).
5. Avoid "to be" words.

DAY ONE

1. The airplane dove toward the water.

2. The Boy Scouts pitched their tents in the woods.

3. Snoopy dug a hole under the fence.

4. John drove his truck to town.

DAY TWO

1. The basketball player dribbled the ball.

2. Two sharks swam near the shore.

3. We waited in line for our turn.

4. Carla dropped a vase.

DAY THREE

1. The child's balloon floated away.

2. Jerry bumped into Sharon. .

3. The artist painted a picture.

4. Susan listened to music.

Additional Comments and Feedback

Lesson 22: First-Person Point of View, Part 2

Last time, you wrote a descriptive composition about a picnic scene from a parent's point of view. For this lesson, write another composition about the same scene, but from the perspective of a different character.

Point of view is the telling of a story, an experience, or a situation through the eyes of one character. Remember: limited omniscience means you can't know what everything or everyone else in the story is thinking.

Even though it's the same picnic, tell the story from a different point of view. Look at the composition you wrote for Lesson 21. Now try to observe the scene as if you're one of the following:

- An older grandparent-type taking in the scene from a nearby bench
- The custodian or groundskeeper who must clean up afterward
- An animal at or near the picnic, such as a squirrel, dog, seagull, raccoon, or ant

Write a two-paragraph composition from the perspective of this new character. Write in first person ("I"), choosing either present or past tense. Your job is to influence the reader's feelings about this picnic—to make your reader feel the emotions of this second character. This character also observes the parent who voiced the previous narrative for Lesson 21.

Here is an example of a composition written about the same picnic as last time, but from a new point of view.

The Janitor's Big Day

by Ben, age 13

These Saturday picnics give me a headache—just look at the commotion. Screaming kids, recklessly running, trample my newly planted marigolds in pursuit of a runaway kite. Among the brightly colored kites, I spot a green camouflage airplane. A small boy struggles to control it. Called to lunch, the beaming child reels in his plane and speeds towards his waiting dad. Smoky yet fragrant, the aroma of their barbecued hamburgers floats across the soccer field. Unfortunately, my lunch sack contains only a crusty peanut butter sandwich and a squashed banana.

Eventually the crowds disappear, leaving behind overloaded trash cans and garbage strewn about the lawn. In the picnic area, remains of beans and salads litter the ground. What a mess! Crows, daring scavengers, help me clean up the leftovers. Pecking eagerly, the black birds finish off the breadcrumbs. Suddenly, the park lights switch on, signaling that my workday is complete. At home a Tylenol awaits.

Directions

1. Decide what the observer might see, hear, and smell.
2. Brainstorm on a sheet of blank paper, either by making columns or a mind-map. Be thorough, filling your brainstorming worksheet with many possibilities. As you make notes, refer to Lesson 21's composition to keep a sense of connection between the two narratives.
3. Begin with one of the following topic sentences.

If you are an older person:

Soaking up all the noise and activity, I take (or took) notice of one young family.

If you are the custodian or grounds keeper:

These Saturday picnics give me a headache—just look at the commotion! OR Saturday's picnic gave me a headache—the day was filled with commotion!

If you are an animal:

Waiting patiently in my _____, I survey(ed) the busy scene (around me, below, in the park, etc.).

4. You have limited omniscience. You're an observer at the picnic. Put yourself in this new character's place and write as if you are that character. Include your emotions and sensory experiences. If the character didn't observe the action, you can't write about it. Write only what your character knows and feels.
5. Do not describe everything the person observes!
6. Do not use the phrases I smell, I see, I hear. Try:
 - Salty sea air (does what) or A whiff of fresh sea breeze (does what) instead of I smell the ocean.
 - Barefoot children instead of I see children with bare feet.

7. The laughter of children (doing what) or Laughing loudly, barefoot children (do what) instead of I hear children laughing.
8. Choose concrete, specific, descriptive words (see your Word Lists for help).
9. Write two paragraphs that are each 5-7 sentences long.
10. Use no more than one “to be” word in each paragraph.
11. Use different kinds of sentence starters and sentence variations. Use each once or twice in your composition, and use at least five different ones in each paragraph:
 - sentence beginning with paired adjectives
 - sentence beginning with a present participial phrase
 - sentence beginning with a past participial phrase (Note: Look for past participle ideas in the "Characteristics/Expressions/ Behaviors" or "Emotions" word lists.)
 - sentence beginning with an -ly adverb or adverb phrase
 - sentence beginning with a prepositional phrase
 - sentence beginning with a subordinate conjunction
 - sentence using an appositive
 - sentence using a simile
12. Use a transition word or phrase to connect paragraphs.
13. Use different sentence lengths. Include some shorter five- or six-word sentences along with your longer ones.
14. Practice writing concisely. Remove unnecessary sentences, words, or phrases. Keep your descriptions crisp yet simple. Write for clarity.
15. Use concrete, specific, descriptive words (see Word Lists for help). Write about the activities in a vivid and sensory descriptive manner. These examples demonstrate ways to write more concretely:
 - Wearily, I rest my feet and watch dozens of eager children clamber onto the swings, tubes, and tunnels at the playground.
 - As the family munched their fried chicken and juicy watermelon, they suddenly noticed a fat brown squirrel scampering onto a rock.
 - Carelessly, the children toss chicken bones and watermelon rinds into the sand.

- Energetic and brave, gleeful youngsters in bright swimwear splash fearlessly in the icy lake.
- Laying a worn and faded patchwork quilt in the shade of an oak tree, the smiling parents watch their active toddlers toss fallen leaves into the air.
- Wearing a determined look, a sandy-haired lad wrestled with his kite string.
- Creaking and clanging, the noisy old swings remind me to repair them on Monday.
- A little blond boy, the one flying a battered silver kite, left trails of popcorn and wrappers all over the grass.
- Thankfully, the pounding surf of high tide washed away the evidence.
- Squawking at the children, I swoop toward the leftovers scattered across the sand.

16. Be sure your tenses agree. You can write in either present or past tense as long as you're consistent.

Writing Descriptive Narration, Part 2

DAY ONE, TWO, and THREE

Directions

1. Rewrite the following paragraph over the next three days. Read the story carefully before beginning to write.
2. Apply what you learned in Lesson 21 about expanding weak narration by adding important details and description.
3. Expand the vague narrative into a paragraph that clearly expresses what you want your reader to learn about the situation.
4. Replace weak nouns and verbs with specific ones. Add colorful adverbs and adjectives.
5. Use a variety of sentence types.

He ran through the city, dodging people and cars. He was being followed, and it seemed hopeless. Then he saw a tunnel, and the man slipped into the darkness. As he crept into the tunnel, the sirens and other noises seemed to disappear. He found himself in front of a door. He opened the door. It creaked. Inside sat a table, a couple of chairs, and a box. Setting himself on a chair, he caught his breath. Josh Cameron had outwitted his enemy once again.

 - ___began with an -ly adverb ___included an appositive
 - ___began with a prepositional phrase ___included a simile (one only)
 - ___began with a subordinate conjunction (although, as, because, if, since, though, unless, when, where, while)
- ☐ In each paragraph, have I included at least one subject-verb sentence?
- ☐ Have I included several 5- or 6-word sentences?
- ☐ Did I write concisely by removing unnecessary words, phrases, or sentences?
- ☐ Did I write a strong closing sentence that gives a feeling of ending?

MECHANICS

- ☐ Did I put my name and date in the upper right-hand corner?
- ☐ Did I write two paragraphs? Is each paragraph 5-7 sentences long? How many? 1st _____ 2nd _____
- ☐ Did I indent, leave margins, and skip every other line?
- ☐ Did I double-check my spelling? Circle suspected words; look up and make changes.
- ☐ Did I double-check capitalization and punctuation? Have I corrected any errors??
- ☐ Did I use complete sentences? Did I check for run-on sentences and misplaced modifiers?
- ☐ Did I correctly use this Checklist along with colored pencils? Did I make corrections before revising?
- ☐ BEFORE TURNING IN MY WORK: Did I staple my papers together in this order: Brainstorming on the bottom, "sloppy copy" on top of that, neatly rewritten copy next, and this Checklist on top?

Lesson 23: Narrative Voice

When you wrote about the picnic in the park, you described the same event twice, each time through the eyes of a different person: a participant (the parent) and an observer (an elderly person, janitor, or animal). The point of view was determined by each character's opinions, frame of mind, and experiences. In this lesson, you once again experiment with point of view and narrative voice.

Point of View

Point of view, the angle from which a story is told, depends on who is telling the story.

- First-person point of view means one of the characters is telling the story and writes from an "I" perspective. An author writing in first person can't know what everything or everyone else in the story is thinking. The person telling the story is the narrator. In the book Black Beauty by Anna Sewell, Black Beauty tells his own story. In this example, the narrator is a horse.
- Third-person point of view means someone outside of the story is telling it and writes from a "he/she/they" perspective. This puts the narrator in a special position of knowing what the characters think and feel—like a mind reader.

When the narrator knows what one character thinks and feels, it's called limited omniscience. Although narrators can only know what one character thinks and feels, they can still observe the actions of other characters in the story.

When narrators know what all the characters think and feel, it's called unlimited omniscience. They can see the whole picture. For example, they can describe the panic of two people in a single-engine plane during a severe thunderstorm. Then they can switch to the airport and describe the emotions and actions of the worried ground crew as they prepare for the plane's emergency landing.

It's easy to write a first-person account when the events in the story happened to you personally. But as you've discovered, it's a lot more challenging to put yourself in someone else's shoes and describe an experience from their perspective.

First-Person Narrative Voice

To experiment with first-person narrative voice in this lesson, put on your creativity hat and pretend to be an animal. Document your activity in diary format, as if you were writing a journal entry. To keep things simple, choose one activity rather than several. For example, if you're a black bear, you might tell how you caught a fish in a stream, retrieved honey from an old log, or taught your cub to climb a tree. But don't write about all three of these in one paragraph.

Third-Person Narrative Voice

Your third-person narrative voice paragraph focuses on the same animal. But this time you're not part of the story. Instead, you're the narrator who tells about the animal's activity or behavior and describes it from your perspective as an observer who is outside the story.

Read the following sample paragraphs.

In the first one, the author writes in past tense using first-person voice. The second paragraph, a third-person narrative, uses present tense. You can choose either voice for your compositions.

Though both paragraphs deal with the mink's eating and hunting habits, the first paragraph actually focuses on the mink as prey rather than as predator. The two paragraphs are, indeed, about two completely different events.

Mink's Narrow Escape

In the early evening, as I prepared to pounce on a tempting crayfish, a gray shadow briefly crossed my path. Looking up in alarm, I spied an enormous owl circling above me. Swiftly and silently, the great bird plunged from its height, its massive wings outstretched. As the prick of a knifelike talon pierced my back, I dove into the dark stream to escape my predator. I was safe! The cool water momentarily soothed the sharp pain. Warily, I emerged from the creek and hurried to the safety of my burrow, where I nursed my tender wound and dreamed of the tasty crayfish that should have been my dinner.

Icy Escapade

As winter overtakes the woodland, the small brook begins to freeze in the shallower places. Searching for a wayward rodent on this bone-chilling afternoon, a sleek mink darts gracefully onto the ice. As he approaches the opposite shore, he startles suddenly. A loud c-r-a-c-k! shatters the silence. In an instant, the slender mammal slips through the broken surface into the frigid water. The mink, an excellent swimmer, soon pops up downstream, his alert black eyes taking in his surroundings. Like a small torpedo, he glides deftly through the chilly creek, his webbed feet serving as paddles. Exiting onto the snowy bank, the watchful animal suddenly spies a mouse scurrying across a clearing. Crafty and swift, the cunning mink surprises its prey and enjoys a winter feast.

Lesson 23: Writing a Narrative in First and Third Person

Directions

1. Choose an animal. Woodland mammals certainly make interesting subject matter, but you can also choose a jungle animal, farm animal, or other creature.
2. Briefly read up on your animal. Browse through a book about animals or animal behavior or look online for information. This assignment shouldn't require a trip to the library.
3. Focus on a different activity or situation for each paragraph. Consider the following, or come up with your own ideas:
 - Grooming habits
 - Foraging or hunting for food
 - Caring for or teaching their young
 - Building a home
 - Escaping from a dangerous or threatening situation
 - Interesting trait or behavior
4. Go back to your reading material to better understand the specific behaviors you plan to write about.
5. Brainstorm thoroughly so you have plenty of information to choose from when it's time to write. Start by making a chart with two columns on a sheet of blank paper.

Column 1: Character (Animal)

- Behavior and activity
- Appearance

Column 2: Setting

- Season (time of year)
- Habitat or surroundings. Include plenty of sensory descriptions. In addition to describing the animal's activity, your paragraph needs to give a detailed word picture of the habitat.
- Setting may include other creatures that interact with the main character.

6. Write each narrative on its own page. Paragraphs must be 7-9 sentences long.

7. Write the first paragraph in first person. The animal is the narrator.
 - Keep the focus on one activity or situation.
 - Do not begin your narrative by saying "I am a wolverine" or "Let me tell you about my life as a weasel."
8. Write the second paragraph in third person. A narrator outside of the story describes the action.
 - Write about the same animal but choose a DIFFERENT activity.
 - You can refer to your animal as he, she, or it—as long as you maintain pronoun consistency throughout the paragraph.
9. Be sure tenses agree within each paragraph. You may write both paragraphs in the same tense, or you may write one paragraph in present tense and one in past tense.
10. Write descriptively. See the paragraphs on p. 23-2 for examples of how to use emotion words and detailed description to make your narrative vibrant and engaging.
11. Use sentence variations. Specific sentence variations won't be assigned for this lesson, but your final grade will reflect your wise use of different sentence types. Choose from among these:
 - Paired adjective sentence starters (Find excellent ideas for paired adjectives in your "Sound Words," "Texture Words," and "Visual Words" lists.)
 - Present or past participle sentence starters (You'll find many past participles in the "Characteristics/Expressions/ Behaviors" or "Emotions" word lists.)
 - -ly adverb (or adverbial phrase) sentence starters
 - Prepositional phrase sentence starters
 - Appositives (especially appropriate in your second paragraph)
 - Similes
 - Subordinate conjunctions
 - Subject-verb sentences
12. Use sentences of different lengths.
 - Long sentences work well in peaceful settings where there's not much action.
 - Short sentences (6 words or fewer) are especially effective during tense or exciting parts of a narrative.
13. Write titles that capture the emotion of each narrative. Include the animal's name in the title of your first-person paragraph, since that paragraph may not mention what kind of animal it is. Your third-person paragraph title does not need an animal name.

Unit 6:

Persuasive Writing and Essays

Lesson 24: Persuasive Writing (Writing an Ad)

So far, you've learned three basic writing forms: descriptive, informative, and narrative.

- Descriptive writing appeals to the senses through vivid, colorful details.
- Informative writing instructs, enlightens, educates, or helps the reader.
- Narrative writing focuses on a storyline and the related action taking place. It generally includes characters, setting, plot, and the passage of time.

Another useful writing tool is called persuasion. Persuasive writing tries to convince the reader to accept a certain belief or follow a course of action. Instead of appealing largely to the senses, persuasive writing depends mainly on reasoning and clear logic and appeals to human emotions.

Persuasion is key to effective advertising. Companies spend a great deal of money each year on radio, magazine, and TV ads to promote their products. They hope to convince buyers that Brand X will give them the shiniest floor, the healthiest hair, or the whitest. People also use persuasion to convince others to vote for them, shop at their stores, follow their religious beliefs, or accept their points of view.

Combine elements of writing to produce the most effective composition. For example, when you wrote an informative biography, you also included narrative writing. When you wrote a narrative, it was important to add vivid description. Similarly, when you write to persuade, you may also inform or describe to help make your point.

- Suppose you believe Sonya Ramos is the best candidate for mayor. If you want to convince others to vote for her, first you have to tell them about her impressive qualifications, her integrity, and her community involvement.
- Perhaps you plan to sell popcorn to raise money for your organization. It will be important to describe each variety and flavor in an attempt to appeal to your potential customers.
- Maybe your youth choir is traveling to London for a competition. To help raise funds, you might write a letter to a family from your community describing your trip and letting them know about your need for financial support. Your persuasive letter could convince this family to help in some way.

Each of these situations offers a chance to persuade someone to take action. As you write an advertisement this week, you will try to convince someone to take action, too.

Lesson 24: Identifying Elements of a Persuasive Ad

Companies spend millions of dollars every year hiring special writers to do one job: Create ads that persuade consumers to buy their products. This week you try your hand at advertising, creating an ad for a toy. It's your job to make this toy sound so appealing that no parent or child could imagine life without it! Draw on your writing experience to plan a descriptive ad that appeals either to logic or emotion.

Directions

Read this enticing ad and answer the questions that follow. Note the informal writing style.

Know why kids splash through puddles, jump into leaves, and hate to come in for dinner? Because kids and nature were made for each other! And that's why NatureFriends created the colorful, durable Young Explorer's Hiking Set. When kids buckle on our hiker's belt, they're outfitted for treks through the backyard or park. What creepy crawlies live in your yard? The powerful magnifying glass will give your junior naturalist a close-up view. Battery-operated flashlight, real canteen, whistle, and 20-page field guide will entertain him for hours. There's even a working compass to outfit the budding outdoorsman. Our Young Explorer's Hiking Set opens the door to fascinating adventures for the curious child.

- ☐ Who is the consumer? _____
- ☐ What features describe this toy's safety? _____

- ☐ What features describe this toy's educational appeal? _____

- ☐ What tells you that the child will enjoy this toy? _____

- ☐ What need was created? _____
- ☐ How will this toy meet that need? _____

- ☐ What claims does this manufacturer make about the toy? _____

☐ Does this ad appeal to emotion or to logic? _____

☐ List the toy's qualities. _____

☐ What vivid adjectives describe the toy's components? _____

☐ In the ad on page 24-3, find an example of each of the following. Write the phrase or sentence on the line.

Use of first person _____

Use of second person _____

Sentence fragment _____

Use of a contraction _____

Use of questions _____

Short sentence _____

Sentence beginning with and, but, because, or so _____

Can you see how all these factors work together to persuade?

Lesson 24: Persuasive Ad Brainstorming Worksheet

Find a photo of a toy and invent new features for it. Alternatively, choose a favorite toy you own now or one you enjoyed when you were younger.

Before beginning, glance through some magazines or online product descriptions, reading different kinds of ads. This will help you get an idea of how an ad should look or sound.

Describe the Toy (Brainstorm answers to the following)

1. Name of toy _____
2. Type of toy _____
3. Appealing characteristics of the toy _____

4. Why do you (or why did you) like to play with it? (emotion/feeling words) _____

5. What qualities might entice other children to play with this toy? _____

6. What would parents like about the toy? _____

7. Think of colorful, concrete words to describe your toy (unbreakable, educational, colorful, imaginative, cuddly, safe, etc.). _____

Develop the Ad

1. Will you use an emotional appeal or a logical appeal? _____
2. With a colored pencil, underline the descriptive words you wrote for Step 7 above that would satisfy this appeal.
3. What kind of need will you create? _____
4. Who will be the consumer? (check one)
☐ Parent (why would a parent purchase this product?) _____
☐ Child (to what age would this toy appeal?) _____
5. What claims do you want to make about your toy? _____

6. List some additional phrases and ideas that would add to the appeal of your ad.

Write the Ad

1. Write a 6- to 10-sentence advertisement for your toy.
2. Create a need for this toy—and then tell how the toy will meet that need.
3. Apart from a subordinate conjunction, the sample paragraph about the Young Explorer's Hiking Set doesn't use sentence variations. That's because the ad relies on other methods instead (see Step 6 below). So while sentence variations are optional, you may still find a way to use a few.
4. If you make guaranteed claims, be sure they are truthful and realistic.
5. Ads are often written in a combination of first and second person. The ad reminds the consumer, "We have a product and you need it!"
6. Again, notice in the example that ads sometimes use other features not normally acceptable in "regular" writing, such as:
 - Friendly, casual writing style
 - Use of questions
 - Sentence fragments
 - Phrases or short sentences
 - Contractions (there's, it's, you've, etc.)
 - Sentences beginning with and, but, because, or so
7. Your ad does not need a title.

Lesson 24: Student Writing Skills Checklist

CONTENT

- ☐ Are my topic and choice of words appropriate for my audience?
- ☐ Does the name of my toy have appeal to both children and parents?
- ☐ Who is my audience? ___parents ___children
- ☐ What advertising appeal did I use? ___emotion ___logic
- ☐ Did I create a need for the toy?
- ☐ Did I explain how this toy will meet that need?
- ☐ Does my ad sound realistic?
- ☐ Does my ad sound persuasive?
- ☐ Do all sentences support the topic of the advertisement?

STYLE

- ☐ Did I write a strong opening line that grabs the consumer's attention?
- ☐ Did I use no more than two "to be" words, including contractions? Circle (to be) words in red.
- ☐ Did I replace repeated main words with specific, vivid, concrete words? Underline repeated words in blue.
- ☐ Did I remove or replace weak words? Underline vague/weak words in green.
- ☐ Did I write in second person?
- ☐ Have I varied my sentences by correctly using these in my ad?
 - ___incomplete sentences (phrases) ___short sentences or phrases
 - ___sentence variations ___contractions
 - ___a phrase or two that start with and, but, because, or so
- ☐ Have I included one short sentence (six words or fewer)?
- ☐ Did I write a convincing closing sentence to wrap up my ad?

MECHANICS

- ☐ Did I put my name and date in the upper right-hand corner?
- ☐ Did I write one paragraph? Is it 6-10 sentences long? How many sentences? ____
- ☐ Did I indent, leave margins, and skip every other line?
- ☐ Did I look up words whose spelling I'm not sure about? Have I made corrections as needed?
- ☐ Did I double-check capitalization and punctuation? Have I corrected any errors??
- ☐ Did I check for misplaced modifiers?
- ☐ Did I correctly use this Checklist along with colored pencils? Did I make corrections before revising?
- ☐ BEFORE TURNING IN MY WORK: Make sure I have stapled all my papers together in proper order.

Lesson 25: Writing an Opinion Essay

Introduction to Essay Writing: Essays vs. Reports

Throughout your school years, you'll find yourself in situations that will require you to write an essay. Have you ever wondered how an essay is different from a report? A report is usually an organized collection of facts. In a biography, this might include birthplace; childhood; major events in the subject's life; and major contributions to science, literature, or society. You won't usually express opinions when writing a factual report, and you might include diagrams or charts to illustrate your points.

An essay, on the other hand, requires you to interact with the material and not just list a bunch of facts. Webster's New World Student Writing Handbook defines an essay as "any short piece of writing that analyzes or interprets something in a personal way." Essays require critical thinking as you compare or contrast; analyze; draw conclusions; give opinions, reasons, and explanations; and use logic.

Typical Kinds of Essays

- ☐ Test questions
- ☐ Job, college, or scholarship applications
- ☐ Short compositions for various subjects (literature, history, science, music, etc.) that develop a topic in one of the following ways:
 - Literary analysis (responding to a piece of literature)
 - Cause and effect
 - Compare or contrast
 - Definition or description
 - Opinion (argumentation)
 - Persuasion
- ☐ Timed essays (e.g., in-class essays or written portions of college-entrance exams)

To Write a Successful Essay

- ☐ Keep your audience in mind.
- ☐ Stay focused on the question or topic.
- ☐ Use transitions like for instance, in other words, consequently, or in fact to connect ideas and paragraphs and make your writing flow better.
- ☐ Use a more formal (but not stuffy or unnatural) structure, vocabulary, and style.

- ☐ Show that you have a clear understanding of your subject.
- ☐ Use a well-organized plan (an outline).
- ☐ Give specific examples to support your topic.

Although you'll meet all types of essays in your high school years, this unit focuses on helping you write effective multi-paragraph essays that answer a particular question. These essays will often appear on subject tests like history or English and on some proficiency exams. They may be timed or untimed.

A well-written essay tells the reader whether or not you know your topic by how clearly you write and how well you explain your points.

The three steps to producing an effective essay include planning, writing, and revising. Lesson 25 will explain and illustrate each of these as you learn to write an opinion essay.

What Is an Opinion Essay?

This lesson's opinion essay requires you to express an opinion on a certain topic. An essay that expresses and supports an opinion often serves two purposes:

- To share ideas and cause readers to think about them.
- To persuade readers to accept the writer's position or to change their mind about a topic.

The opinion paper states the writer's point of view and supports it with details and reasons. Writers can give their opinion without trying to change the readers' mind. But if they do attempt to convince the readers to accept their point of view, the paper will also be persuasive.

Tips for Writing Your Opinion Essay

- Write about a subject that is controversial or difficult to prove.
- Express an opinion that will probably cause opposition.
- Support your opinion with facts, logic, causes or effects, comparisons, definitions, descriptions, details, examples, illustrations, and statistics.
- Don't say I believe, I think, or in my opinion because these phrases state the obvious. Your paper, by definition, will tell the reader what you believe or think.

Lesson 25: Writing an Opinion Essay

Choose a Topic

Write about something you have an opinion about. You could express your views on just about anything. What current events might invite people to form strong opinions? What are your personal tastes? For a list of possible topics, see TM Appendix p. B-17. Choose one that fits the criteria for an opinion essay. This will be the basis for your thesis statement.

Example opinion: The driving age should be raised to eighteen.

Think about your subject. How does it affect readers' lifestyle, health, eating habits, family, job, pocketbook, recreation, or hobbies? Choose details that matter to readers. Remember your audience. Are they congressmen? Parents? Peers? Businesswomen? Clergy? A board of directors? Teachers? You get the idea.

My audience: A state senator

Brainstorm for Ideas

When making a list of possible supporting details, it often helps to think "because."

Veganism is a healthy lifestyle because ____

Cursive handwriting should be taught to students because ____

The FDA should ban energy drinks because ____

(Don't actually use the word because when brainstorming or listing supporting details.)

Below is an example of a brainstorming session on the topic:

The driving age should be raised to eighteen (because younger teenagers):

- lack driving skills
- lack experience
- are more likely to cause injury or death from reckless driving
- are often overconfident
- like to show off
- have less respect for rules and authority
- lack maturity
- yield to peer pressure
- cause majority of accidents
- tend to be less responsible
- tend to take greater risks
- are more likely to use drugs or alcohol
- don't maintain their cars well
- get distracted by their loud music
- like to joyride
- might not use seatbelts when parents aren't around
- get distracted easily by passengers
- tend to overcrowd their cars
- play dangerous games with their cars
- drive too fast
- text while driving
- are often in a hurry, impatient

Decide on Your Main Points

Choose three main points (topics) that you can further develop with details. Select general points, saving more specific facts and reasons to support each topic.)

Here are three possible main points chosen from the brainstorming list:

1. Lack maturity
2. Yield to peer pressure
3. They can be easily distracted

► Something in this list makes it structurally incorrect. Can you find it? If not, look up “parallelism” online or in an English handbook and decide what should be changed.

Make an Outline

Organize the details in outline form. Outlines must maintain a parallel structure. List your three main points by the Roman numerals. Then, under each main point list subpoints next to the capital letters. Fill in at least two subpoints for each main point. Later, you will further develop these subpoints

You will notice that the order of the outline below has been changed from the order of the original three points listed above. This student wanted to attract the readers’ attention right off the bat. She also wanted to end with the point that was, in her opinion, the most important. Sometimes order of main points does not matter. When it does, take advantage by arranging your points in such a way as to make the best attempt to persuade.

Example Outline:

- I. Yield to peer pressure
 - A. Show off
 - B. Take risks to impress friends
 - C. May use drugs and alcohol
- II. Are easily distracted
 - A. By loud music
 - B. By unruly fellow passengers
- III. Lack maturity
 - A. Lack respect for rules and authority
 - B. Lack skill and experience
 - C. Lack patience

Lesson 25: Identifying Main Points and Transitions

Directions

There are different ways to format a 5-paragraph essay. Three options follow.

1. In each, underline in colored pencil the three main points every time they appear.
2. Find several examples of parallelism and circle the words/phrases in another color.
3. Insert transitions words where needed and circle them in yet another color.
4. Use the paragraph symbol (¶) to mark the places where a new paragraph should begin. (Hint: Each main point should be a new paragraph.)
5. Underline main points in each conclusion.

OPTION 1: State your thesis and introduce your three main points in the first sentence. Then develop each point, one at a time, in its own paragraph.

Because vegetable gardening contributes to a healthier diet, physical and mental wellbeing, and closer relationships, families and communities should garden together. Eating right contributes to feeling right. Gardening encourages people to eat better by growing wholesome food. Just-picked fruits and vegetables inspire home gardeners to preserve their harvest, so by canning and freezing, everyone can enjoy tomato sauce, pickles, and luscious jams year-round. Working outdoors nourishes body, soul, and mind. Benefitting from exercise, sunlight, and fresh air, those who garden feel more energized. Instead of watching TV or playing video games, they are burning calories and strengthening muscles. Furthermore, mildly strenuous exercise, such as digging or weeding, reduces stress and improves attitudes. Because outdoor activities encourage social interaction, sharing a vegetable patch brings people together. Families, for example, build relationships as they cultivate their backyard plots. In cities, gardening co-ops help neighbors turn empty lots or bare patio spaces into inviting green spaces. Most importantly, gardens encourage neighbors to get outside and interact as they work side by side, grow organic food, and share the bounty. Everyone should consider starting a garden project. Not only will participants enjoy vine-ripened fruits and vegetables, they will also reap the benefits of physical exercise and healthy relationships. Whether in a backyard, vacant lot, or apartment courtyard, gardening makes a productive and meaningful social activity.

OPTION 2: State your thesis in the first sentence. Introduce your three main points in the second sentence. Then develop each point, one at a time, in its own paragraph.

Follow the directions on, p. 25-5.

Families and communities should garden together. Growing their own food helps people eat healthier, experience physical and mental wellbeing, and nurture relationships. Eating right contributes to feeling right. Gardening encourages people to eat healthfully by planting wholesome fruits and vegetables and harvesting them at the peak of freshness. Just-picked tomatoes, peppers, or berries inspire home gardeners to preserve their harvest, so by canning and freezing, everyone can enjoy tomato sauce, pickles, and luscious jams year-round. Gardening benefits body, soul, and mind. Rather than spend time glued to an electronic device or TV, family members can dig, prune, mulch, pull weeds, and push a wheelbarrow. Invigorating and mildly strenuous, yardwork burns calories, strengthens muscles, reduces stress, and clears away mental cobwebs. Because exercise, sunlight, and fresh air are nature's energizers, these activities often feel stimulating and uplifting. Gardening encourages social interaction. Whether families spend time on their rural or suburban backyard plot, or members of a gardening co-op transform a vacant lot into a thriving oasis, cultivating a vegetable patch brings together people of all ages. As neighbors and friends share tasks in their communal garden—such as planting and watering—they grow not only food, but lasting relationships. Everyone should consider starting a garden project. Participants share in the bounty of vine-ripened produce, but more importantly, they reap the benefits of physical activity through a common, engaging experience.

OPTION 3: State your thesis in the first or second sentence. Then introduce and develop your three main points one at a time, each in its own paragraph.

Follow the directions on p. 25-5.

Families and communities should spend time planting and tending a vegetable garden together. Growing and preserving their own food encourages people to eat more healthfully. Nutrient-dense strawberries, peppers, and other fruits and vegetables explode with flavor when picked at the peak of maturity and eaten right away. However, a glut of zucchini or peaches often inspires home gardeners to preserve their bounty. Canning and freezing, two popular methods, ensure that everyone can enjoy wholesome veggies, tomato sauce, or frozen fruit year-round. Working in the garden benefits body, soul, and mind. Mildly strenuous, it burns calories, strengthens muscles, and relieves stress. Rather than spend time glued to an electronic device or TV, family members can head outdoors to break up ground, hoe flower beds, pull weeds, and push a wheelbarrow. Exercise, sunlight, and fresh air are nature's energizers, so activities like these contribute to physical and mental wholeness. Gardening nurtures relationships. Whether families spend time growing food in their backyard plot, or community members transform a vacant lot into an abundant vegetable patch, cultivating a garden brings together people of all ages. A bountiful harvest is the obvious perk. But more importantly, shared tasks in a communal space—such as planting and watering—encourage social interaction and foster healthy friendships. The gardening experience yields more than nutritious, vine-ripened produce: it contributes to an overall sense of wellbeing and promotes positive relationships. Friends, neighbors, and families alike would benefit from starting a garden project.

Lesson 25: Writing the Opinion Essay

1. Follow your plan. If you wrote a clear outline, writing your essay will be simple.
2. Write a 5-paragraph (10- to 20-sentence) essay.
 - Paragraph 1 is the introduction. State your opinion in the first or second sentence of this paragraph. This is your thesis statement.
 - Paragraphs 2, 3, and 4 make up the body of the essay. Discuss one main point in each of these paragraphs, supporting that point with appropriate details such as facts, examples, logic, illustrations, or comparisons. Consider leftover ideas from your brainstorming list. A news source can help when writing about a current event.
 - Paragraph 5 is your conclusion. Restate or summarize the thesis in different words.
3. Refer back to p. 25-2 for opinion-essay writing tips. Follow these additional guidelines:
 - Don't use the word the word "you" in your essay.
 - If your subject matter could trigger antagonism or controversy, begin with details least likely to offend or turn away the reader.
 - Include transitions to help the reader follow your thoughts and see the relationship between ideas and paragraphs. "Using Transition Words to Make or Introduce Your Points" (Word List p. 16) will help.

This sample essay is based on the outline on p. 25-4.

Raising the Driving Age

Evidence confirms that teenage drivers cause the majority of accidents. Because young drivers yield to peer pressure, are easily distracted, and lack maturity, the driving age should be raised to eighteen.

To begin with, teens tend to take more risks in order to impress their companions. Overconfident and cocky, they might show off by speeding, joyriding, or playing dangerous road games. While partying with friends, some young people foolishly use drugs or alcohol before getting behind the wheel. Because of their recklessness, these teenagers place themselves, their passengers, and other vehicles in danger.

In addition, easily distracted young motorists may fail to concentrate on their driving. Their loud, booming music can drown out honking horns and sirens or cause the drivers' minds to wander. Texting while at the wheel, another risky practice, increases likelihood of accidents. Likewise, unruly or rowdy passengers can prevent teenage drivers from paying attention to the road.

Most importantly, immature drivers lack skill and experience. They may fail to heed road signs and traffic regulations or misjudge timing or distance. Reacting to dangerous situations requires an automatic response that comes with maturity and practice. Furthermore, impatience to arrive quickly at a destination can cause high-school-age drivers to irresponsibly ignore speed limits, stoplights, or crosswalks.

Clearly, a higher incidence of injury or even loss of life results from having impressionable, inattentive, and immature drivers at the wheel. Therefore, the driving age must be increased to eighteen.

Repeated Words

You may notice a number of repeated words in the essay. Sometimes there's no choice. For example, there aren't many synonyms for "driver" (motorist is the only appropriate one). But you can interchange words like young people, teenagers, or teens.

Another hard-to-replace word is drive (or driving). In this essay, the thesaurus didn't help. The writer had to think of creative alternatives, choosing words like "recklessness" to replace "reckless driving" or "speeding" in place of "driving too fast." As long as main words are repeated sparingly, you may use them in your essay.

"To Be" Verbs

Up to now, WriteShop has been training you to eliminate "to be" words from your paragraphs. Too many of them result in passive writing. It's better to write actively, using strong, specific verbs to describe action or behavior.

As you enter into this next phase of writing and begin to focus on essays, expect to devote more mental energy to organizing your material and thinking critically about your subject. While you still need to use interesting sentence variations, it's more important to work on developing your topic in an organized manner. With this in mind, you have permission to include up to five "to be" words in this essay.

WriteShop has taught you to become more aware of "to be" words—and to avoid them when possible. But counting "to be" words takes time! So when you start to write long essays and reports, it's no longer realistic to count them.

"To be" words are still an important part of the English language; however, they no longer have control over you. As your writing matures, you'll grow more skilled at spotting and replacing some of these passive verbs. Use them as you need but rely on your sentence variations to keep your writing interesting!

Refer to your Student Writing Skills Checklist to review requirements for sentence variations and other elements of style and mechanics.

Lesson 25: Reorganizing Your Essay

Directions

1. Use this section to write a more organized essay.
2. These tips will be especially helpful if you did not
 - Use transition words (or enough of them) in your essay.
 - Know when to begin a new paragraph.
 - Establish and develop three main points.
 - Summarize your three main points in an effective conclusion.
3. You may find it useful to review the pre-writing activity essays "Identifying Main Points and Transitions" (pp. 25-5 to 25-7).

Fix-Your-Essay Checklist

- ☐ Did you FOLLOW the DIRECTIONS? Make sure your essay answers the question and addresses all points in the topic.
- ☐ Don't play "guessing games" in formal essays. Did you tell your reader right away who or what is the subject of your essay?
- ☐ You may need to rewrite your thesis statement (topic sentence). If necessary, decide how you will develop it:
 - Introduce your three main points in the first or second sentence. Then develop each point, one at a time.
 - Or, state your thesis. Then, introduce and develop your three main points one at a time.
- ☐ In the body of your essay, review and fix your first main point. If needed:
 - If your thesis statement is only one sentence long, don't begin a new paragraph yet. Otherwise, introduce your first main point in a new paragraph.
 - Begin with a transition like First, or To begin with.
 - Develop this point with supporting details and concrete examples. Don't keep repeating yourself with vague thoughts. Support points with specific illustrations.
- ☐ Next, review and fix your second main point. If needed:
 - Remember to begin a new paragraph and to indent.
 - Use a transition like In addition, Second, or Next.
 - Again, use supporting details to develop and expand this point. Give two or three specific examples.

- ☐ Finally, review and fix your third main point. If needed:
 - Begin another new paragraph and indent.
 - Use a transition like Furthermore, Finally, or Above all.
 - Again, be specific. Don't ramble, repeat yourself, or use vague vocabulary. If your reader will wonder, "What did she say?" or "He hasn't convinced me," you'll need to add concrete examples and persuasive facts.
- ☐ When finished, write or revise your conclusion. If needed:
 - Begin another new paragraph and indent.
 - If you wish, you may use a transition phrase like Clearly or In conclusion.
 - Restate your three main points. Restate means to change the wording while keeping the original meaning. It's too late to introduce any new points.

To Keep in Mind

- ☐ By now you should know to use colorful, descriptive vocabulary and avoid weak and overly repeated words.
 - Replace at least two overused or dull nouns and verbs with concrete synonyms.
 - Find places to insert at least two strong, interesting adjectives or adverbs.
- ☐ Do not support your main point by repeating your main point. Instead, think of convincing details or other additional information to help support your main idea.
 - Poor example: "Sam Emerson influenced my education through his outstanding teaching skills. He knew how to teach his subjects well. Because of this, I learned a great deal from him."

Here, there's no new or supporting information; every sentence repeats the main point using different words. The reader wants to know, "How did he influence you? What kinds of teaching skills did he demonstrate? How did he teach well? What did you learn from him?"
 - Good example: "Sam Emerson influenced my education through his outstanding teaching skills. Not only did he present material in a clear and understandable way, he also made each subject interesting and entertaining. He accomplished this through his use of drama, costumes, lively group discussions, and meaningful object lessons. Because of his inspiring example, I have decided to become a teacher as well."

Here, the writer supports the main point with facts and examples.

Using Parallelism

Example 1

Suppose you were asked to list three qualities found in a friend. You could choose:

1. Loyalty
2. Kind
3. Speaks truthfully

Expressed in a sentence, these qualities might look like this:

Aiden, my best friend, exhibits loyalty, is kind, and he always speaks truthfully.

Even though you think this sentence sounds awkward, you might not be able to pinpoint the reason, which makes it hard to fix the problem. So why does this sentence seem disjointed? The writer didn't follow the rules of parallelism, a pattern of repeated, similarly constructed phrases or sentences. Understanding parallelism helps you write clearly, eliminate confusion, and avoid awkwardness.

The phrases "exhibits loyalty," "is kind," and "he always speaks truthfully" are not parallel because each is constructed using different parts of speech: loyalty is a noun, kind is an adjective, and truthfully is an adverb. To make sense, use parallel construction.

- ☐ A series of nouns:

Aiden demonstrates loyalty, kindness, and truthfulness.

- ☐ A series of adjectives:

Loyal, kind, and truthful, Aiden has earned his employer's respect.

- ☐ A series containing parallel adjectives + prepositional phrases

Aiden is loyal to his friends, kind to animals, and truthful to his parents.

- ☐ A series containing parallel verbs + adverbs

Aiden behaves loyally, acts kindly, and speaks truthfully.

Example 2

This time list the benefits of exercise for teenagers.

1. To gain strength
2. Develop coordination
3. Energy

Notice how a sentence written from this list creates shifted construction (no parallelism).

Exercising regularly helps teens gain strength, develop coordination, and energy.

The sentence can be rewritten to make it parallel and improve its flow.

- ☐ A series of parallel verbs + nouns

*Exercising regularly helps teens gain strength, develop coordination, and feel energetic. (Notice the agreement: helps gain, helps develop, helps feel.)

- ☐ A series of parallel adjectives

*Exercising regularly helps teens grow strong, coordinated, and energetic.

DAY ONE

Directions: Rewrite each sentence using parallel construction.

1. Laura danced with grace, elegance, and was charming.

2. The stunt plane dipped dangerously, spun crazily, and it landed smoothly.

3. A fierce bull charged wildly across the meadow, over the footbridge, and trampled the neighbor's pansies.

4. I admire President Lincoln for his courage, how he persevered, and being honest.

5. Reading worthwhile literature stretches the imagination, will improve your vocabulary, and it increases knowledge.

6. Drinking untreated water, unwashed hands, and to eat improperly cooked food can promote deadly diseases such as salmonella.

DAY TWODirections

1. Rewrite each sentence using parallel construction.
2. List the type of parallel construction you used in your sentence, choosing from the word bank below. Sometimes you will be using a combination of two. If so, write "adjective + prepositional phrase" or "verb + noun," for example.

adjectives	verbs
adverbs	prepositional phrases
nouns

1. To camp, going fishing, and hiking make ideal vacation activities.

Parallel construction: _____

2. Microwave ovens are convenient, they are inexpensive to purchase, and easily operated.

Parallel construction: _____

3. As a child, my favorite blanket kept me warm, gave me security, and I was comforted by it.

Parallel construction: _____

4. Yosemite National Park provides sanctuary for wildlife, backpackers can use hiking trails, and visitors enjoy the breathtaking scenery.

Parallel construction: _____

5. Restricting children's television time encourages them to develop their imaginations through play, they interact with family members during the evening, and enjoying outdoor activities on weekends.

Parallel construction: _____

6. When holding a baby, handle him gently, carefully, and with love.

Parallel construction: _____

Directions

- ☐ Write parallel sentences.
- ☐ If you use the following sets of words to form the sentence, you may end up with shifted construction. Rephrase them so each sentence conforms to the rules of parallelism.
- ☐ Some of these sets may already be parallel and will not need rewording. Try to avoid using the word "because" in your sentences.

1. Topic: Tell how your dad or mom has inspired, affected, and/or impressed you.
(leads by example, supports the activities I am involved in, I get disciplined with love)

2. Topic: Tell why it is important to attend college.

(exposes you to new ideas, you become a more well-rounded person, door is opened to greater career opportunities)

3. Topic: How can young people learn the importance of money management?

(budgeting wisely, avoiding credit card debt, saving for college)

4. Topic: What do you look for in a good book?

(the plot is exciting, fascinating characters, it has a positive moral message)

5. Topic: Explain why people should not smoke.

CONTENT

- ☐ Are my topic and choice of words appropriate for my audience?
- ☐ Paragraph 1: Does the introduction feature a clear opinion/thesis in the first or second sentence?
- ☐ Paragraph 2: Is Main Point 1 supported with facts, illustrations, examples, and other details?
- ☐ Paragraph 3: Is Main Point 2 supported with facts, illustrations, examples, and other details?
- ☐ Paragraph 4: Is Main Point 3 supported with facts, illustrations, examples, and other details?
- ☐ Paragraph 5: Does the conclusion rephrase my three main points and sum up the essay?
- ☐ Did I stick to the topic?
- ☐ Does the content flow smoothly? Are details organized and easy to follow?
- ☐ Does the title give a clue about the content of my essay?

STYLE

- ☐ Did I use no more than five "to be" words? Circle (to be) words in red.
- ☐ Did I replace repeated main words when possible? Underline repeated words in blue.
- ☐ Did I use concrete words and remove or replace weak words? Underline vague/weak words in green.
- ☐ Did I organize the essay by developing the three main points in order?
- ☐ Did I follow the rules of parallelism in both my outline and composition?
- ☐ Did I use transitions between paragraphs and when shifting from one point to another?
- ☐ Have I correctly used a variety of the following?
 - ___ began with paired adjectives ___ began with a past and/or present participle
 - ___ began with an -ly adverb ___ included an appositive
 - ___ began with a prepositional phrase ___ included a simile
 - ___ began with a subordinate conjunction (although, as, because, if, since, though, unless, when, where, while)
- ☐ Have I included subject-verb sentences?
- ☐ Did I use both long and short sentences?
- ☐ Did I avoid writing in second person (you)?
- ☐ Did I write concisely? Did I avoid repeating ideas unnecessarily?

MECHANICS

- ☐ Did I put my name and date in the upper right-hand corner?
- ☐ Did I write five paragraphs for a total of 10-20 sentences? How many sentences in all? ____
- ☐ Did I indent, leave margins, and skip every other line??
- ☐ Did I look up words whose spelling I'm not sure about? Have I made corrections as needed?
- ☐ Did I double-check capitalization and punctuation? Have I corrected any errors??
- ☐ Did I use complete sentences? Did I check for run-on sentences and misplaced modifiers?
- ☐ Did I correctly use this Checklist along with colored pencils? Did I make corrections before revising?
- ☐ BEFORE TURNING IN MY WORK: Make sure I have stapled all my papers together in proper order.

Lesson 26: Letter to the Editor

Introduction to Editorial Letters

If you skim through a daily newspaper or online news site, you might find a section in which people write to express their opinions about current issues. This section may be called something like "Opinion" or "Letters to the Editor." These letters, while expressing opinions, may also try to convince readers, inform the public, express appreciation to a good Samaritan, or pose moral or ethical questions. When people write to the editor, they share about issues that are important to them.

A typical letter to the editor gives an opinion about local, state, national, or international matters. Writers comment on education choices, religious principles, neighborhood eyesores, issues of morality or social injustice, or pressing needs within their own communities. Following a child's tragic death, a writer may urge his city to build fences along railroad tracks. Another might complain about the high price of gasoline or ballpark tickets. During elections, letters to the editor often remark about candidates, propositions, or taxes. Occasionally, a reader will respond to someone else's letter, whether it sparks outrage or agreement.

When writing a letter to the editor, keep the following in mind.

- ☐ Discuss a subject of current interest to the public that's also of interest to you.
- ☐ Keep it brief (under 300 words).
- ☐ Express your opinion clearly in the first or second sentence.
- ☐ Support your opinion with details, showing you understand the issue.
- ☐ When possible, suggest a solution to the problem.
- ☐ Write in an organized manner.
- ☐ Don't say I think, I believe, or In my opinion, since an editorial letter is already understood to be your opinion.
- ☐ Be especially gracious and polite. Don't name call, accuse unfairly, or make broad assumptions (e.g., all _____ behave in this way, or believe this idea, etc.).
- ☐ Write in a slightly more formal tone, but try not to sound stuffy.
- ☐ Include your name, email address, and phone number. Most newspapers will not print anonymous editorials.

Lesson 26: Writing an Editorial Letter

This assignment is similar to the opinion essay. Again, you will write an opinion on a topic you feel strongly about. For ideas, see the list below, read through the "Opinion" section of a newspaper, or ask your teacher or parent if you can choose a suitable essay topic from the list in the Teacher's Manual Appendix B.

- ☐ Comment on a letter-to-the-editor, either to take an opposing viewpoint or to agree with the writer.
- ☐ Comment on a current event you find in the news.
- ☐ Give your opinion on an issue of morality (abortion, mercy killing, censorship on the Internet).
- ☐ Express your thoughts on a political or educational issue.
- ☐ Comment on a public eyesore in your community (a particular vacant lot, an unkempt home or business, a rundown park or public building, etc.), offering solutions if possible.
- ☐ Express your opinion on a topic of interest to teens (video games, drugs, vaping, volunteering, feeding the homeless).

Follow these steps. Use the "Letter to the Editor Worksheet" (p. 26-9 and 26-10).

- ☐ Jot down the subject matter you wish to discuss in the essay.
- ☐ Write a thesis statement. This is your statement of purpose and generally includes your opinion on the subject.
- ☐ Brainstorm by making a list of reasons that validate, clarify, or support your statement.
- ☐ From this list, select the top three reasons. Rearrange their order if necessary.
- ☐ Develop a three-point outline, supporting each main point with at least two facts, examples, or reasons.
- ☐ Write your letter, offering solutions whenever possible.
- ☐ Your letter must be five paragraphs and 12-16 sentences long.

A word of caution: You will probably notice when reading people's opinions and comments that not all letters to the editor are gracious, well-organized, or grammatically correct. This does not mean your editorial may be rude, difficult to follow, and full of mistakes! You are learning proper writing skills so you can communicate your thoughts on even the most sensitive topics in a respectful way.

A Sample Letter to the Editor

An important bill sits on the desk of California's governor. You read a brief article about it in the newspaper or online, like the idea of the bill, and decide to comment.

1. Jot down the subject matter you wish to discuss:

People would be able to apologize for causing injury to another party without their apology counting against them in court.

2. Give your opinion in the form of a thesis statement:

I urge the governor to sign this bill into law.

3. Brainstorm by making a list of possible supporting reasons on your worksheet (p. 26-9). Remember from Lesson 25 that sometimes it helps to think because: "Citizens should vote 'no' on Measure X because ____." "Teenagers should volunteer in nursing homes because ____." "I urge the governor to sign this bill because ____."

4. Write your three main points on the Brainstorming worksheet, such as:

1. This plan works in other states.
2. This plan would reduce chances of a lawsuit.
3. This plan would not allow the apology to be used as evidence.

5. Prepare an outline on the back of the worksheet (p. 26-10). For example:

I. This plan works in other states

A. Massachusetts and Texas

B. Its success has generated support in CA

II. This plan would reduce chances of lawsuits

A. People less likely to sue if they get an apology

B. A heartfelt response can soften anger

III. This plan would not allow the apology to be used as evidence

A. A confession of wrongdoing would still be admissible

B. Consequences would still apply if found guilty

C. The freedom to apologize would speed healing in both parties

Can you point out the parallelism in this outline?

6. Write the letter. Write a 5-paragraph essay supporting your opinion about a current topic of interest. Support your three main points in the body of the letter with facts and examples. Develop this letter in the same way you developed your Opinion Essay.

Essay Structure

- ☐ Greeting: Begin with the salutation: Dear Editor.
- ☐ Introduction: Jump in with an effective introduction. State your opinion in the topic sentence, which may be the first or second sentence. This is Paragraph #1.
- ☐ Body
 - Paragraph #2: Develop your first main idea using details and reasons.
 - Paragraph #3: Support your second main idea with additional details and reasons. Use an effective transition word to introduce each new main idea.
 - Paragraph #4: Support the third main idea, also using details and reasons.
- ☐ Conclusion: Wrap up your thoughts. As part of the conclusion, suggest a solution to the problem or a possible course of action. This is Paragraph #5.
- ☐ Closing and Signature: Conclude with Yours truly or Sincerely and sign your name.

General Guidelines

The following tips will help keep your writing on track.

- ☐ If your subject matter could create antagonism, begin with details least likely to offend or turn away the reader. Write courteously and graciously.
- ☐ Do not call names or generalize unfavorably.
- ☐ Do not write in second person. The word you must not appear in your letter.
- ☐ Do not state In my opinion or I think.
- ☐ Don't get carried away by your emotions.
- ☐ Include transitions to help the reader follow your thoughts and see the relationships between ideas. For help, refer to the Word List on pp. 16-17, "Using Transition Words to Make or Introduce Your Points."
- ☐ Stick to the point and write concisely, avoiding wordiness and rambling.

Sample Letter to the Editor

Dear Editor,

A bill on the governor's desk has the potential to reduce the number of injury lawsuits in California. I urge him to sign it into law.

First, this sensible bill would make an apology "legal." It would allow people involved in lawsuits over injury accidents to say they were sorry without affecting their legal case. This bill would work for three reasons. First, it has succeeded in other states. Massachusetts and Texas have passed similar laws, resulting in wide support for the California bill.

Furthermore, studies show that people are less likely to sue if they receive an apology. Supporting the argument that a heartfelt response can soften anger, words of remorse could diffuse the injured party's wrath and maybe cause a change of heart.

Finally, although this measure would amend the California Evidence Code so apologies could not be used as evidence in a trial, confessions of responsibility or wrongdoing would remain admissible in court. By law, a person who caused injury or death to someone else would still face the consequences of his or her actions. However, the freedom to voice a heartfelt apology, a normal human reaction, can free that person from some of the heartache or guilt.

Effective, ethical, and humane, the principles of this bill challenge the governor to sign it before another apology goes unspoken.

Sincerely,

Lucy Ann McDaniel

 - ☐ began with paired adjectives ☐ began with a past and/or present participle
 - ☐ began with an -ly adverb ☐ included an appositive
 - ☐ began with a prepositional phrase ☐ included a simile (one only)
 - ☐ began with a subordinate conjunction (although, as, because, if, since, though, unless, when, where, while)
- ☐ Have I included several subject-verb sentences?
- ☐ Have I used both long and short sentences?
- ☐ Did I avoid writing in second person (you/your)?
- ☐ Did I write concisely, unnecessary repetition of ideas?

MECHANICS

- ☐ Did I put my name and date in the upper right-hand corner?
- ☐ Did I write five paragraphs for a total of 12-16 sentences? How many sentences in all? _____
- ☐ Did I indent, leave margins, and skip every other line?
- ☐ Did I look up words whose spelling I'm not sure about? Have I made corrections as needed?
- ☐ Did I double-check capitalization and punctuation? Have I corrected any errors??
- ☐ Did I use complete sentences? Did I check for run-on sentences and misplaced modifiers?
- ☐ Did I correctly use this Checklist along with colored pencils? Did I make corrections before revising?
- ☐ BEFORE TURNING IN MY WORK: Make sure I have stapled all my papers together in proper order.

Lesson 27: Compare or Contrast Essay, Part 1

Another type of informative writing is called compare and contrast. To compare means to write about the similarities between two events, people, or ideas. On the other hand, to contrast means to discuss the differences between them. Sometimes you'll be asked to write a comparison paper, looking only at the ways two things are alike. Sometimes you'll write a contrast paper, discussing only their differences. At other times, you must look at both sides, comparing and contrasting in the same essay.

Usually, you'll organize your essay by order of importance, with most important elements given last. Choose facts and details that identify key similarities or differences, picking at least two or three important points for each paragraph.

Choose either a "whole-by-whole" or a "part-by-part" pattern of organization.

Whole-by-whole: Present all arguments for one whole side or issue before presenting arguments for the other side. For example, if contrasting the North and the South during the Civil War, first discuss Union leaders, Union soldiers, and key Union victories. Then discuss the Confederate leaders, soldiers, and victories.

Part-by-part: Present both sides of each part or subtopic before moving on to a new one. For instance, first contrast Union and Confederate leaders. Then, contrast Union and Confederate soldiers. Finally, contrast key Union and Confederate victories.

Example of a whole-by-whole outline:

Main Point 1: Shopping Online

Topic A: Shopping convenience

Topic B: Product availability

Topic C: Customer service

Main Point 2: Shopping in Physical Stores

Topic A: Shopping convenience

Topic B: Product availability

Topic C: Customer service

Example of a part-by-part outline:

Main Point 1: Shopping convenience

Topic A: Online

Topic B: In stores

Main Point 2: Product availability

Topic A: Online

Topic B: In stores

Main Point 3: Customer service

Topic A: Online

Topic B: In stores

The ability to make comparisons and contrasts is important in many ways. In high school and college, you'll need to write about the similarities and differences among people, places, and ideas you've read about.

You may be asked to compare two generals, like Napoleon Bonaparte and Alexander the Great. You might contrast two monuments, such as the Eiffel Tower and the Statue of Liberty. Or perhaps you'll be required to compare and contrast two major battles, two historical documents, or two ideals, such as socialism and capitalism.

In this lesson, you compare OR contrast, writing about the similarities or differences between two ideas, events, people, or places. Think about your topics. Are they alike in many ways, or are they completely different? Sometimes it's hard to tell whether they're more similar or more dissimilar. A Venn diagram (p. 27-5) uses overlapping circles to show similarities and differences. This type of graphic organizer can help you sort your ideas as you begin to plan your essay.

Compare/Contrast Essays

- ☐ Are usually organized by order of importance, with key elements given last.
- ☐ Contain facts and details that identify important similarities or differences (selecting at least three important points for each paragraph---which means you need to discuss six details about your chosen subject).
- ☐ Use special vocabulary to signal the reader about whether the author is paralleling similarities or contrasting differences. See p. 27-4 for a list of signal words.

Choose a Topic

- ☐ You will be comparing OR contrasting in a two- or three-paragraph composition.
- ☐ Pick a topic. Your teacher has a list of essay topics to choose from. (See "Essays That Compare and Contrast," Teacher's Manual Appendix B, pp. B-20 and B-21.)
 - If possible, pick a topic that makes you think critically about important issues.
 - For information-gathering, use your literature, history, or science textbook, a newspaper or magazine, or an online resource.
 - Depending on your topic, you may also draw from personal experience.

The essay on p. 27-3 contrasts main characters from two short stories, "Neighbour Rosicky" by Willa Cather and "The Revolt of 'Mother'" by Mary E. Wilkins Freeman. The writer has chosen to use the whole-by-whole organizational style.

In the first paragraph, he discusses the men's different personalities. In the second, he looks at their different priorities.

For a different whole-by-whole approach, he could write about Adoniram Penn in the first paragraph and Anton Rosicky in the second.

Selfish and Selfless: A Tale of Two Men*Contrast Essay by Ben, age 14*

Adoniram Penn and Anton Rosicky, diligent, hardworking farmers, have vastly different personalities. To begin with, Adoniram appears insensitive, cold and selfish. Though he loves his family, he has a hard time expressing himself. He also does not realize his family's needs and concentrates only on his own. For example, when his wife wants a new house, he ignores her and builds a barn instead. While Penn is unexpectedly called away, his determined wife moves into the barn and claims it as her home. Her husband finally acknowledges the error of his ways and sees what a new house would mean to her. On the other hand, Mr. Rosicky expresses himself quite well and looks for ways to serve his family. When his doctor tells him he cannot farm anymore because of his poor heart, instead of lying around feeling sorry for himself, Anton unselfishly asks his wife if he can do some carpentry work for her.

Furthermore, both men have different priorities. While Penn appears to esteem himself and his livestock more than he values his family, Rosicky shows gentleness and understanding toward others and never imposes himself on people. He is always looking out for those around him. For instance, when his daughter-in-law plans on going out, he washes dishes for her so she can get ready. Above all, when it comes to providing for their families, these two men have opposite ideas about what is important. Mr. Rosicky provides a warm, loving atmosphere for his wife and sons and meets their emotional needs. Conversely, while Penn supplies his family with food, clothing, and shelter, he has a hard time giving emotional support. Clearly, Anton Rosicky is kinder and more thoughtful by nature. He successfully applies the principle of treating others the way he would want to be treated. Sadly, Adoniram Penn still has much to learn.

Lesson 27: Writing a Compare or Contrast Essay

Directions

1. Read about each of your topics to help you understand them better. Discuss difficult or controversial issues with an adult to gain perspective.
2. Make a Venn diagram on p. 27-5. It will help you spot differences or similarities and decide whether your topics will be easier to compare or to contrast.
3. Transfer the Venn diagram information to the worksheet on p. 27-9.
 - List details from the overlapping area under "ways they are alike "
 - Or list details from the nonoverlapping areas under "ways they are different," writing the information from Circle A in the first column and the information from Circle B in the second.
4. Decide whether you will organize your essay using a whole-by-whole or a part-by-part approach, and plan accordingly.
 - Whole-by-whole: Write two paragraphs in which you either compare or contrast your two main points. Write 7-10 sentences per paragraph.
 - Part-by-part: Write three paragraphs in which you either compare or contrast your three main points. Write 5-7 sentences per paragraph.
5. Support the main point of each paragraph with two or three examples.
6. Use appropriate signal words that make sense for the sentence.
 - When comparing, use comparison words such as again, alike, also, as, besides, both, comparatively, furthermore, in addition, indeed, in fact, in the same way, like, likewise, moreover, resemble, and similar.
 - When contrasting, choose contrast words such as although, but, conversely, different, dissimilar, diverse, either, however, in contrast, neither, nevertheless, on the other hand, rather, still, though, whereas, while, and yet.
7. Use a transition between paragraphs (see Word List "Using Transition Words to Make or Introduce Your Points," p. 16). A transition word may be one of your signal words.
8. Avoid saying "X is different from Y because" or "This is how X and Y are the same."
9. Use sentence variations for interest and use your thesaurus to find synonyms.
10. Use no more than four "to be" words.

Lesson 28: Compare or Contrast Essay, Part 2

Follow instructions for the assignment in Lesson 27 (see p. 27-4) to write another compare or contrast essay. If you "compared" in your last essay, then you must "contrast" in this one. Likewise, if you "contrasted" in your previous composition, you "compare" this week.

In addition, you must organize your material differently. If you organized according to the "whole-by-whole pattern" then switch to "part-by-part," or vice versa.

A new practice worksheet (p. 28-5) has been provided for the pre-writing activity you do with your teacher. You will also find a second worksheet (p. 28-7) for your lesson assignment.

If part-by-part: Did I write three paragraphs? Is each paragraph 5-7 sentences long?
- ☐ Did I indent, leave margins, and skip every other line?
- ☐ Did I look up words whose spelling I'm not sure about? Have I made corrections as needed?
- ☐ Did I double-check capitalization and punctuation? Have I corrected any errors??
- ☐ Did I use complete sentences? Did I check for run-on sentences and misplaced modifiers?
- ☐ Did I correctly use this Checklist along with colored pencils? Did I make corrections before revising?
- ☐ BEFORE TURNING IN MY WORK: Make sure I have stapled all my papers together in proper order.

Lesson 29: Essays That Describe or Define

Since Lesson 25, you've practiced writing different kinds of essays, including opinion, letter to the editor, compare, and contrast. You prepared each one in a slightly different way, though they all required some structured form of organization. This essay, although different in content, still requires planning and preparation. Develop your thesis statement with three main points and support those main points with details, facts, examples, and illustrations. When possible, give personal examples that make your essay come alive.

You're almost to the end of WriteShop. You now have tools you'll use throughout your life to write with style. This lesson won't be filled with detailed instructions. Instead, you'll find a simple worksheet for brainstorming and preparation. Choose a subject from "Essay Topics" in the Teacher's Manual Appendix beginning on p. B-18 (Essays that Describe or Define).

Draw on all your skills to write an interesting, colorful, descriptive essay. Limit yourself to no more than five "to be" words. Your 5-paragraph essay should be 15-20 sentences (enough to thoroughly develop each point) and use a variety of sentence types. Refer often to your thesaurus to select the right words.

Here's an example of an essay that describes. While adequate, it's a bit boring and underdeveloped. After you read it, compare it with the essay on p. 29-2 to see how personal stories and examples not only expand the essay but also add human interest to the content.

A True Friend

Some of the qualities I like in a friend include kindness, honesty, and loyalty. First of all, a kind friend can be counted on to encourage and support me in an understanding manner. Standing by me when I am discouraged or down in the dumps, this compassionate person also rejoices when life is going my way. Second, a friend who is honest will speak truthfully to me when I make poor choices and need gentle correction. Bold yet loving, he will not hesitate to speak frankly, even at the risk of losing my friendship. Finally, a loyal companion stays with me through thick and thin. Without a doubt, a true buddy demonstrates warm-heartedness, truthfulness, and faithfulness in every situation.

Unlike this short essay, the essay on the next page starts off with an introductory paragraph laying out three main points that define different aspects of friendship.

Three separate paragraphs make up the body of the essay. In each paragraph, the main point is developed both with facts and an illustration from the writer's personal experience. Without these illustrations, the essay would simply be a nice commentary on friendship. By telling specific stories, however, the writer makes his subject seem real to the reader. Consequently, the essay becomes more interesting too!

Finally, the concluding paragraph recaps the three main points by stating them in a new way. The writer then closes with a final thought.

Keep the above steps in mind when you write. They'll help you stay organized and on track so your readers understand your points and easily follow your train of thought.

A True Friend

The qualities I like in a friend include kindness, honesty, and loyalty. Mark and I have been best friends since fifth grade. Over the years he has demonstrated these three important attributes.

First of all, as a kind friend, Mark can be counted on to encourage and support me in an understanding manner. Standing by me when I am discouraged or down in the dumps, my compassionate buddy also rejoices when life is going my way. For example, when I took first place in the science fair last year, Mark seemed genuinely excited for me, even though he did not even receive an honorable mention.

Second, because he is honest, Mark speaks truthfully to me when I make poor choices and need gentle correction. Bold yet loving, he will not hesitate to speak frankly, even at the risk of losing my friendship. I remember a time when I acted mean-spirited and made fun of a girl who wore a brace on her leg. Mark confronted me about the way I talked about her and reminded me that I didn't need to put her down in order to feel important or popular. Not only was he honest with me, he showed me yet another example of his kindheartedness.

Finally, Mark, a loyal companion, stays with me through thick and thin. He proved this to me in January when I asked him to come to my championship hockey game. Right after he had said "yes," his cousin invited him to a rock concert. Mark stayed faithful to his promise and came to my game instead.

Without a doubt, a true buddy demonstrates warm-heartedness, truthfulness, and faithfulness in every situation. I feel privileged to have a friend like that in Mark.

Lesson 30: Timed Essays

Now that you know how to write a well-developed essay, it's time to practice writing timed essays. You'll face many timed essays throughout high school and college. Knowing how to write a well-planned, organized essay is clearly a valuable asset. Challenging topics won't intimidate you once you've gained confidence in the skill of essay writing.

Sometimes a test will contain essay questions. These allow teachers and professors to find out how well you really understand a subject. They'll be able to tell whether or not you know your topic by how clearly you write and how well you explain your points.

The best preparation for such essay tests is practice. You would do well to write a 20- or 30-minute timed essay once a week to keep your "mental muscles" fit. It's not any harder to write a timed essay than an untimed one. With practice you'll learn to work within your time limit.

As with untimed essays, timed essays require plenty of time for planning, writing, and revising. If you spend enough time planning, the remaining steps will flow smoothly and effortlessly. In other words, if you know your material, it will be obvious to you during outlining. If you can't think of a thing to say when you're planning, don't expect a sudden flash of inspiration when it's time to write.

Some timed essays won't require prior knowledge of a subject; they'll be based on personal experience. Others, like essay questions on a test, will assume you've studied and prepared, because you'll have to be familiar with the subject matter. But be careful: Even if you understand the subject matter well, a poorly organized essay can bring your grade down. Don't underestimate the importance of effective organization.

There is no Student Writing Checklist for Lesson 30. First, there's no time to use a checklist when you're writing against the clock. Second, checklists aren't allowed during timed essays. Your parent or WriteShop teacher will make an exception for your first few timed essays by letting you use the "20-Minute (or 30-Minute) Timed Essay Checklist." Timed-essay editing time should focus on proofreading. You won't be asked to limit "to be" words; however, it's always good practice to avoid them if possible.

After your teacher reviews your essay with a Teacher Writing Skills Checklist, you'll be asked to rewrite it. Even though you won't have the opportunity to revise timed essays in the "real world," this remains an important step in the learning process. It will help you get better at 1) organization, 2) developing your thesis statement, and 3) budgeting your time. Errors in mechanics count against you in a timed essay. This revising step will make you aware of mistakes you make most often.

Lesson 30: Writing a Timed Essay

The four steps to an effective essay include timing, planning, writing, and revising. Timing may vary slightly. Your aim is to stay within the time frame your teacher specifies, say 20 or 30 minutes. Single-space when writing timed essays. Do not skip lines.

Timing

1. Depending on the length of time you have for writing, divide writing tasks into manageable chunks of time. Of course, the majority of your time should be spent writing the actual essay. However, if you spend important minutes planning and organizing, you won't need as much time to write as you might think.
2. For a 20-minute essay of 2-3 paragraphs, here is a good guideline: Planning: 6 minutes; Writing: 11 minutes; Revising: 3 minutes.
3. For a 30-minute essay of 3-5 paragraphs, try this timeline: Planning: 9 minutes; Writing: 16 minutes; Revising: 5 minutes.

Planning

1. Read the question carefully. Look for a key word that tells what the teacher wants.
2. Write your thesis statement. Write your thesis statement or topic sentence.
3. Brainstorm. Write down the key word or phrase you found in the question. Next, make a list or a mind-map of other words and phrases that relate to the topic. Do not skip this important step. Once the words begin to flow, you'll lose the fear that you have nothing to say about the topic.
4. Choose your viewpoint. When an essay prompt asks you to give your opinion, compare, contrast, or persuade, you must choose your position.
5. Outline. Choose main points and list supportive details to develop your position.

Writing

1. Follow your plan carefully. Stick to the point, avoiding rambling or "rabbit trails."
 - ☐ Write your topic sentence or thesis statement. It may contain your three main points, but if not, define and develop your three points as the essay progresses.
 - ☐ Present the main ideas from your outline, in order. Support each idea with details.
 - ☐ End with your conclusion, summing up your thesis statement.
2. Give specific information. Use names, dates, places, examples, and details---concrete evidence that supports your topic.

3. Watch your time. If you use up too much time in one area, you might neglect another. You will lose points for incomplete answers.

Revising

1. Do quick revisions and proofreading at the same time. Check for spelling; accuracy of names, dates, and details; omitted or repeated words; grammar and punctuation errors.
2. If possible, change a couple of sentences to include interesting variations.
3. Look over your vocabulary. Did you choose concrete words? Replace vague or boring words with colorful, interesting synonyms.
4. Combine two short, choppy sentences into one; shorten a rambling or run-on sentence into two concise ones.
5. Your teacher knows you don't have time to recopy. Still, try to make corrections neatly.
6. Reread your essay quickly, giving yourself one last opportunity to hear your words again. Make sure any changes you made didn't harm the flow of your text.

A word to the wise: Believe it or not, teachers were once students! They know the tricks young people use when they don't know the answer or when they don't know how to develop their topic. So be careful! The four most common "tricks" are:

- Large handwriting – hoping to fool the teacher into thinking you have much to say because you took up lots of space on the paper
- Pompous, fancy, or multisyllabic vocabulary – hoping to fool the teacher into thinking you're so smart for knowing such big words that she won't notice you didn't have anything concrete to say about the subject
- Redundancy – repeating the same argument or stating the same point over again, using different words, hoping to fool the teacher into thinking you know more about the subject than you really do
- Padding with unrelated details – also hoping to fool the teacher into thinking you know more than you do

It's easy to avoid these traps. Whenever possible, know your material ahead of time. For an essay question on a history test, for example, prepare beforehand by reading and studying the chapter and any class notes.

Sometimes it's just not possible to prepare in advance. You may not have any idea what the question will be. However, careful organization before beginning to write will be the real "trick" to preparing a winning essay!

Lesson 30: 20-Minute Timed Essay Checklist

Planning (6 minutes)

- ☐ Read question and look for KEY WORD or PHRASE - 1 minute
- ☐ Choose your position and write your thesis statement - 1 minute
- ☐ Brainstorm (MIND-MAP) - 2 minutes

Write down as many words as possible that relate to the subject.

☐ OUTLINE - 4 minutes

- Choose three points from your brainstorming that (1) explain your position, and (2) can be expanded with details. Write them in outline form.

I. Introduction

II. Body

A. Main point 1

B. Main point 2

C. Main point 3

III. Conclusion

- As you write your essay, list details to develop your position. You will not have time to write a fully developed outline. But you'll know exactly where you're going!

☐ Revise your THESIS STATEMENT, if necessary.

Sometimes it helps to include the three points you plan to develop in your essay.

Writing (11 minutes)

- ☐ Use your thesis statement as a topic sentence.
- ☐ Write main points in the order they appear in your thesis statement.
- ☐ Support each point with details or examples from your list. Stick to the topic.
- ☐ Conclusion: Write a restatement of your topic sentence.
- ☐ Watch the time! Don't skip lines! Write two to three paragraphs (about 12-15 sentences).

Revising (3 minutes)

- ☐ Read your essay.
- ☐ Revise and proofread, checking spelling, grammar, and punctuation.
- ☐ Add 1-2 interesting sentence variations. Replace a "to be" word, if possible.
- ☐ Vocabulary: Find synonyms for 2-3 vague or repeated words; add 2-3 colorful, descriptive adjectives or adverbs.
- ☐ Combine short sentences and shorten wordy ones.

Lesson 30: 30-Minute Timed Essay Checklist

Planning (9 minutes)

- ☐ Read question and look for KEY WORD or PHRASE - 1 minute
- ☐ Choose your position and write your thesis statement - 1 minute
- ☐ Brainstorm (MIND-MAP) - 3 minutes

Write down as many words as possible that relate to the subject.

☐ OUTLINE - 4 minutes

- Choose three points from your brainstorming that (1) explain your position, and (2) can be expanded with details. Write them in outline form.

I. Introduction

II. Body

A. Main point 1

B. Main point 2

C. Main point 3

III. Conclusion

- As you write your essay, list details to develop your position. You will not have time to write a fully developed outline. But you'll know exactly where you're going!

☐ Revise your THESIS STATEMENT, if necessary.

Sometimes it helps to include the three points you plan to develop in your essay.

Writing (16 minutes)

- ☐ Use your thesis statement as a topic sentence.
- ☐ Write main points in the order they appear in your thesis statement.
- ☐ Support each point with details or examples from your list. Stick to the topic.
- ☐ Conclusion: Write a restatement of your topic sentence.
- ☐ Watch the time! Don't skip lines! Write two to three paragraphs (about 12-15 sentences).

Revising (5 minutes)

- ☐ Read your essay.
- ☐ Revise and proofread, checking spelling, grammar, and punctuation.
- ☐ Add 1-2 interesting sentence variations. Replace a "to be" word, if possible.
- ☐ Vocabulary: Find synonyms for 2-3 vague or repeated words; add 2-3 colorful, descriptive adjectives or adverbs.
- ☐ Combine short sentences and shorten wordy ones.

Adverbs ("-ly")

- "-ly" adverbs are useful as transition words when connecting thoughts between sentences or paragraphs.
- They are also helpful when concluding a paragraph or a thought.
- Many "-ly" adverbs make excellent sentence starters.
- For variety, adverbs may be moved around within a sentence when describing verbs.

COLOR WORD CAUTIONS

- Use color words wisely. For example, you may describe hair as blonde or mousy, but choose more appetizing words for foods, such as creamy or golden-brown.
- Look up synonyms: Use the dictionary to make sure you're using a synonym correctly.
- Know when to hyphenate* color words: Hyphenate* between two adjectives when they come before a noun and act as a SINGLE WORD (e.g., milk-white skin; melon-colored sweater; denim-dyed overalls). Don't hyphenate when the adjectives follow a noun (e.g., eyes of steel gray; toasted to a golden brown).
- Use color words creatively: For a more "poetic" way to express an object's color, consider saying the color of fresh cream; the color of ripe pears; as dark as rich coffee, etc.
